THE FASHION FOR FITNESS BEGINS EARLY, and active sportswear is as much a wardrobe demand for Wrangler kids as their classic jeans. Like their elders (teens and young adults) toddlers to teens want rugged active sportswear that performs. For spring they also want decided fashion touches. Ever popular for girls and juniors is the bright pastel (sapphire, raspberry, yellow, etc) elastic-waisted romper. It's a winning road runner but ideal for after swim. Or, girls can go for fitness fashion in a two-piece with contrast trim, a keyhole neck. Since no self-respecting jogger can go out without a labelled T-shirt, for boys Wrangler imprints its own "Born in USA" on the top and on the classic duck shorts.

Farm Tours Show Economic Impact On County And Area

Insight into two phases of agriculture which have considerable economic impact on the Thief River Falls area was gained by local businessmen attending tours to area farms Thursday noon. Visited were the Maynard and Ken Mehrkens grain farm and the Martin and Mark Hanson dairy farm.

Tours were arranged by the agri-business committee of the Thief River Falls chamber of commerce and the Pennington county extension service as part of Farm-City week being observed from March 17-24.

Final event of Farm-City week, the annual farm-merchant mixer, will be held tonight at the American Legion club rooms with more than 700 farmers and businessmen expected to attend. Serving of the supper will begin at 6:30 p.m., according to Dwight Tangquist, chairman of the agri-business committee.

As a special attraction, the Minnesota Wheat Growers association will have a display at the parking lot by the American Legion club rooms its mobile kitchen which will soon be shipped to the Philippines to demonstrate and promote the use of wheat flour. The mobile kitchen will be on display beginning at 5 p.m.

Terry Courneya, Pennington county extension director who accompanied the group on tour of the Mehrkens grain farm, outlined information on the economic impact of crops in northwestern Minnesota.

A typical one-family cash grain operation in Pennington county would include about 1,000 acres of cropland, he said. If all the land is owned and a good line of machinery is utilized, the investment can easily amount to $750,000.

Courneya said that the value of grain crops produced from Pennington county for 1979 (in wheat equivalents) would be approximately $18,750,000. He based his calculations on 150,000 acres of cropland, production of an average of 35 bushels of wheat per acre and a market price of $3.50 per bushel.

"If one were to assume a trade area of double the size of Pennington county," he said, "this would translate to nearly $40 million in gross value of crops produced — dollars available for trade in the Thief River Falls area from only the

Silas Hanson

Reelect Hanson To Serve On Midland Board

Silas Hanson of Thief River Falls was reelected to a three-year term on the board of directors of Midland Cooperatives, Inc. during the closing session of Midland's 54th annual meeting at the Radisson South hotel in Bloomington March 18.

Hanson, a farmer in the Thief River Falls area, has served on the Midland board since 1971.

Midland Cooperatives is a regional manufacturing and supply cooperative serving Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, Wisconsin and Upper Michigan. Its sales in 1979 were $517.9 million.

Cooperatives in each of 15 districts in the five-state area nominate a director to the Midland board.

Load Limits On County Roads

Restrictions on all Pennington county roads to go into effect today, according to Arvid Olson, county highway engineer. Restriction limits are based on gross axle weights which include the weight of the vehicle and the load it is carrying, Olson said.

No permits for overweight axle loads exceeding posted limits will be issued during the period when the signs are in place or while road restrictions are in effect.

During the period of March 24 through approximately May 15, any county or township road is restricted to five tons gross weight per axle except as otherwise signed. If no signs are erected, the five-ton gross weight provisions will apply, Olson said.

He listed the following exceptions to the five-ton gross weight per axle restriction in Pennington county:

Posted for seven-ton limits will be CSAH 7 from TH 59 east to CSAH 22; CSAH 28 from TH 1 north to Pennington-Marshall county line; and CSAH 17 from CSAH 3 to the Red Lake county line. CSAH 12 from the Red Lake county line to CSAH 3 will be posted at a six-ton limit.

CSAH 17 from First street in the city of Thief River Falls south to CSAH 3 is a legal axle road and will not be posted, as is CSAH 3 from CSAH 17 to the Polk county line.

"Because of the high costs of maintaining our county roads and the shortage of funds available," the county engineer said, "the Pennington county sheriff's department will be implementing an intensive program to weigh vehicles on our county road system. The department is equipped with portable scales to accomplish this program."

Training For Census Takers Set Mar. 26-29

Local census takers who will visit every place where people live in the county during the 1980 census of population and housing will be trained March 26-29, states district manager Carole Wilson of Bemidji.

Crew leaders will conduct the training. Emphasis will be placed on the importance of a systematic, thorough canvass of the assigned enumeration area to insure a complete count. Classroom training will cover the proper manner of asking questions, use of the census questionnaire, census definitions, and map reading.

"Map reading," the manager said, "is essential because each census taker, using the detailed map of the area to be covered, must canvass every street and road and visit every dwelling place within its boundaries."

CCC Deadline On Crop Loans Is March 31

Pennington county farmers have only until March 31 to take out commodity credit corporation loans on 1979 crop wheat, barley or oats, according to Lucille Haugen of the Pennington county agricultural stabilization and conservation service (ASCS) office.

There has been an increase in the loan rate of 1979 crop grain, she said, and farmers who have taken a loan at the old rate are entitled to additional money. Those who want additional loans should call Mrs. Haugen at the ASCS office.

Farmers selling grain which is under loan to the CCC are to call the ASCS office before they start hauling. By moving or selling mortgaged grain without authorization farmers run the risk of being refused farm stored loans in the future.

"Pennington county has approved loans totaling $5.4 million on 2.8 million bushels of grain in the reserve program and under regular loan," Mrs. Haugen said. "Regulations require that we make regular spot checks on this grain and every bin has to be inspected at least one time every year. When we find a bin empty, regardless of the reason, it is a serious violation of the terms of the loan agreement."

She suggests that farmers avoid the risk by taking a minute or two for a telephone call to the county office before they start loading grain out of storage.

Seminar On Chemical Use Here Saturday

Seminar on chemical use by teenage youth will be held Saturday at 2:30 p.m. at the Evangelical Covenant church in Thief River Falls with Wayne and Mark Thyren of Youth Investment foundation as speakers.

Thief River Falls and Pennington county law enforcement authorities have endorsed the program and encourage public attendance at the seminar. Time will be permitted for questions and answers and there is no charge for attending the event.

Youth Investment foundation works with young people and the problems they face with drug and alcohol use. Wayne and Mark, former Thief River Falls residents now living in Brooklyn Park and Bemidji, respectively, will discuss such areas as physical effects, action and attitude changes, detection of "users" and how parents and friends can help.

The organization presents statistics that 97 per cent of Minnesota high school graduates have experimented with mood altering chemicals, that two out of five high school boys are problem drinkers, that average high school drinking age is 13, that 22 per cent of young people have experimented with chemicals before entering junior high school and 72 per cent of 1,000 high school students questioned were using one or more chemicals on a regular basis.

Arctic To Transfer Scorpion Operation

DAVE WAALE will play the part of Charley Wykeham in the production of "Where's Charley?" to be presented in the Lincoln high school auditorium March 28, 29, 31 and April 1. Kathy Achenbach will play the part of Amy Spettigue in the Lincoln musical which is under the direction of David Morken. All seats will be reserved for the production, with ticket prices set at $2.50.

Arctic Enterprises' plant in Thief River Falls will be the site of all the company's snowmobile manufacturing operations as a result of plans announced late last week by Kenneth J. Severinson, president of the company.

Severinson said that Arctic, the largest snowmobile manufacturer in the United States, plans to move all snowmobile manufacturing operations to Thief River Falls and phase out the remaining manufacturing operations of Scorpion Industries, Inc., at Crosby. Scorpion is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Arctic Enterprises, Inc.

All work related to the continued manufacture, engineering and marketing of the Scorpion line of snowmobiles will be performed at the main production complex here, Severinson said.

Scorpion snowmobiles has been assembled in Thief River Falls in prior years with facilities in Crosby including primarily engineering, marketing and assembly of some specialty components. Approximately 100 people were believed to be involved in various areas of the Scorpion operation at Crosby.

Company officials would not speculate at this time if any of those people would transfer to Thief River Falls for employment here, or if any additional employment created by the transfer would be filled by employees previously placed on lay-off at the Thief River Falls operation.

Severinson stated that "It is important that everyone understand that Arctic will continue to produce and market Scorpion snowmobiles. The planned curtailment of activities at Crosby is a necessary part of our current streamlining efforts which are designed to more closely align our current facilities and manpower levels to our current business operation.

"Although this is a particularly difficult decision to make in light of the adverse impact on the Scorpion employees and the town of Crosby," he continued, "current unfavorable and uncertain economic conditions necessitate this realignment of the company's resources."

Buying Power Of Teachers Shown Through Shop-In

To display unity and buying power of the School District 564 faculty, approximately 150 Thief River Falls teachers purchased more than $5,000 in groceries and other household products at a shop-in Wednesday afternoon at Northland Foods supermarket in Thief River Falls.

According to the sponsoring Thief River Falls Education association (TRFEA), the shop-in was organized "to demonstrate the amount of money spent locally by the teachers". The TRFEA emphasized that it is not boycotting other local food markets and that Northland Foods was selected for the shop-in by random drawing.

The TRFEA committee further stated that teachers decided on the action "as a result of the school board's refusal to settle negotiations locally", and said teachers are concerned about the following questions:

"(1) Why does a well-paid school board, who supports local control, go to an out of town lawyer when it comes to making important decisions?

"(2) How much interest is the district making through unsettled contracts? Will the teachers by compensated for the interest the school district is making on their money?

"(3) If teachers spend over $5,000 in one week in a local food market, how much do they contribute to the local economy over a year's time?

"(4) If the teachers support their local merchants, why does the school board spend over $50,000 of taxpayers on a St. Paul law firm rather than settling teacher contracts locally?"

Reduced Price Or Free Meals Are Available

Families in the Thief River Falls area who have experienced economic situations which lead them to believe their children may qualify for free or reduced price meals at Thief River Falls schools are invited to contact food supervisor Kay Fleegel at 681-2700, extension 205.

Mrs. Fleegel said that applications for free or reduced price meals are available at all school offices in the district.

Cindy Solem Wins In SWCD Speech Contest

Cynthia Solem, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roger Solem of Thief River Falls, was first place winner of the Pennington soil and water conservation district's conservation speech contest conducted recently. Second place went to Tracey Dobkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Dobkins; and third place to Mark Juhl, son of Mr. and Mrs. Duane Juhl, both of Thief River Falls.

Title of the contest was "Clean Water, Who Needs It?" Cynthia will now advance to the area speech contest conducted in Thief River Falls March 29.

WINTER CARNIVAL

BUYING POWER demonstration by members of the Thief River Falls Education association (TRFEA) Wednesday afternoon was conducted in the form of a shop-in at the Northland Foods supermarket. Approximately 150 teachers participated in the event and spent in excess of $5,000 for their week's supply of groceries, according to a tally made by a TRFEA committee. Response to the shop-in scheduled for 4 p.m. was such that a number of participants arriving a few minutes late had to wait to do their shopping as the supply of shopping carts was exhausted. The photo above shows the check-out area as the first shoppers began bringing their grocery-laden carts to the check-out counters.

SOCIETY and CLUBS

Bruggeman And Olson Marriage Vows Spoken

Marriage vows were exchanged at Redeemer Lutheran church in this city on Saturday, January 12, at 2 p.m., by Miss Becky Jo Bruggeman and Danny Lee Olson.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gres Bruggeman, rural Thief River Falls. Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. Duane A. Olson, also of rural Thief River Falls.

Rev. David Gabrielson officiated at the double ring ceremony attended by approximately 275 relatives and friends. The church organist Joyce Halbasch played Handel's "Arioso" and Wanger's "Bridal Chorus," for the processional, and Bach's "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," for the recessional. Soloists Annette Walseth and Carla Reed, friends of the couple, sang "Wedding Song," "Morning Bells," and "Wedding Prayer."

Hurricane Candelabra with pink candles and bows, and white feathered doves graced the chancel.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was attired in a white organza gown featuring a portrait bodice with a sheer cameo insert edged with a Cluny lace ruffle. Matching lace formed the cuffs on her shepherdess sleeves and edged the double flounce on her skirt. To complement her attire, she wore a white garden hat trimmed with Cluny lace, a satin ribbon headband and waist-length streamers. She carried a colonial bouquet of pink roses, white feathered carnations and babies' breath with white satin streamers.

The bride's personal attendant was her sister, Vicky Bruggeman.

Matron of honor was Sally Collins, sister of the bride. Michelle Kraemer and Tammy Johnson, friends of the couple, served as bridesmaids. Their identical tulip-styled gowns of burgandy jersey featured floor-length skirts and knee-length tops with V-necklines. In their hair, they wore a burgandy silk flower surrounded by babies' breath. They carried arm bouquets featuring three pink long-stemmed roses.

Gary Nelson, a cousin of the groom, was best man. Groomsmen were Dale Nelson, another cousin of the groom, and Dean Bruggeman, a cousin of the bride. The ushers were Jeff Olson, brother of the groom, and Marty Collins, the bride's brother-in-law.

The mother of the bride was attired in a long-sleeved, pink knit floor-length gown with a rhinestone inset. The mother of the groom was also attired in a pink floor-length gown. Her gown was topped with a pleated sheer cape with a standup collar. Their identical corsages were of pink roses, cushion mums and babies' breath.

Guests of honor at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Armstrong and Mrs. Lydia Olson, grandparents of the groom.

A reception followed with Mr. and Mrs. Tom Bruggeman and Mr. and Mrs. Larry Haug as host and hostess. Candyce Bergh registered the guests as Sue Olson and Tom Knott ladled the punch.

Highlighting the serving table was a three-tiered "Great Day" wedding cake, featuring chocolate and white layers, iced in white and decorated with burgundy and pink flowers, garlands, and delicate stringwork. Surrounding the base were four heart-shaped cakes topped with angels playing harps. The cake was cut and served by Mrs. Leland Nelson and Mrs. Sid Bruggeman. Pouring coffee were Mrs. Herbert Walter and Mrs. Lloyd VeVea.

At the gift table were Dana Nelson and Steve Olson. Patty Langlie, Kristy Richards, Val Christenson and Kristy Olson served as waitresses.

A wedding dance at the Plummer hall followed with music provided by "The Fugitives."

The evening prior to the ceremony, the parents of the bride hosted a dinner at the Legion club for the members of the wedding party.

For her going away ensemble, the bride wore a three-piece woolen suit in off white and gray.

The couple is now at home in rural Thief River Falls where the groom is engaged in dairy farming with his father. The bride is employed at Hardee's. Both are graduates of Lincoln high school. Photo, R.L. Nieland Studio, Thief River Falls

Children Can Make Discoveries At Zoo

by Jeanne Hanson
'U' M News Service

Could your children figure out why a Minnesota weasel turns white in winter or discover why musk oxen would rather have hooves than toes? Did you know that Bactrian camels store fat, not water, in their humps?

Winter changes in animals' lives can be especially interesting, said Alan Humphreys, science education professor at the University of Minnesota. Parents can take advantage of a trip to the zoo to help their children find out how some animals adapt to winter and learn that winter is not everywhere.

Teaching children about science works best when they can look and find answers themselves, Humphreys said. So he, Dorothy Cole of the Minnesota zoological garden's education department, and a university class for teachers are assembling questions and activities for preschool and elementary school pupils and their parents. Some kits for teachers of elementary, junior high and high school students are already available by phone and at the zoo gift shop. Cost is $3.

Questions like the following can help children understand what they're seeing at the zoo, Humphreys said. Parents stumped by an especially curious child can always ask a zoo volunteer for an answer.

Body coverings and "winter clothes" — Is the animal covered with fur, feathers, scales or skin? Why do Asiatic wild horses grow thicker hair for winter? What will happen to the musk oxen in summer? (They will shed some fur, be hot under the rest.)

How do a duck's feathers and an otter's fur keep them from getting soaked in the water? (At home, have the children drip water on wax paper to see how a duck sheds water; pretend to be the wind and blow at the drops.)

Introduce the idea of camouflage. Why are polar bears white year around? Why do Minnesota snowshoe hares and weasels turn white in winter? Why don't we see brightly colored animals in winter? Are there any exceptions? Why might cardinals and blue jays, for example, need no camouflage? (No winter enemies.) Have children find a place at the zoo or at home where, in their regular clothes, they are camouflaged.

Animal voices — Which animal crows? Moos? Quacks? Honks? Bleats? Snorts? Gobbles? Why do they make these noises? (To show fear, be sociable, show annoyance, signal each other in various ways.)

Listen to the whales' squeaks, clicks and scrapes. Imitate them. Where does the noise come from? Do they seem to "talk" more than other animals? Why? (It's either because they are smarter or like to swim together but want to prevent collisions, or both.)

Protection — What happens to people who aren't careful about danger? How about people who don't get ready for winter? What do turtles do to protect themselves? (Pull into their shells.) Wild horses? (Run.)

When musk oxen are threatened, they make a circle with their heads — and horns — out and the babies in the middle of the circle. Why is this a good idea?

Animal feet — Winter is a footprint paradise, Humphreys said. Find the musk oxen by looking for their hoof prints. Their hoves are as hard as horns and have no feeling, like our fingernails. What other animals have hoves? Why wouldn't a musk ox want to have toes instead? (Toes get cold, aren't needed to climb trees, and aren't good for kicking or for finding moss and twigs to eat.)

What kind of feed to ducks have? How do webbed feet help them? (Have children hold their fingers together and paddle in the bathtub.)

What do whales have instead of feet? What kinds of feet do squirrels and sparrows have and why? (Their clawlike feet help them hold on to trees.) Why might beavers have partly webbed hind feet but front "fingers"? (Because they swim and build.)

Make family footprints in the snow and at home on paper with diluted water colors. Do your pets too.

Walk like the animals you saw. A camel lifts both legs on one side at once. (To do this trick, join hands with someone to get four feet.) A wild horse lifts one leg on each side at once.

Animal families — Watch the snow monkeys for a while. Who is the boss? (He's called the alpha male.) Why does he keep circling the area? (To check for intruders.) Do you see any babies? Who are they with? How do they keep from falling? Now look for the older "kids". Are they playing, fighting, grooming? Who grooms you? Who grooms a monkey? (Virtually any other monkey, to be sociable.)

Would these monkeys be better off living apart, each one in a separate cage in the zoo? (No, they would be lonely, and unprotected if they were alone in a jungle.) Why are families a good idea?

"We're all just learning how to use community resources like zoos for education," Humphreys said. Children who think of animals as cartoon canaries and circus bears can learn a lot fromh the winter zoo.

Miss Laura Cruse, 17, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Cruse of Thief River Falls, has been selected to compete in the 1980 Miss Minnesota Teen USA pageant to be held at the Kahler hotel in Rochester. This pageant is the official state-wide finals for the Miss Teen USA pageant to be held in Albuquerque, New Mexico, in November.

Contestants from all over the state will be competing for the title. All contestants are between the ages of 14 and 18 and must have at least a "B" average in school. They are requested to participate in the Volunteer Service program of the Miss Teen USA pageant. Through this program many young ladies are becoming involved in community activities by contributing at least 12 hours of time to some worthwhile charity of civic work.

Among the prizes the winner of the Miss Minnesota Teen USA pageant will receive is an all-expense paid trip to compete in the national finals at the convention center in Albuquerque, New Mexico, and a $500 cash scholarship to the school of her choice. Over $15,000 in cash scholarships will be awarded at the national pageant in November.

Contestants will be judged on civic involvement, school activities, appearance, poise, personality and patriotic speech or talent. No swimsuit competition is required. Contestants have the choice of presenting a patriotic speech or performing a talent on stage.

Miss Cruse is sponsored by Northern state bank, Purdy's, Mr. Duane's and the convention committee of the chamber of commerce. Her hobbies include cross-country skiing, reading and swimming.

The public Job Service helps increase training opportunities for young people by operating Apprenticeship Information Centers. More than 50,000 people were served during the 1978 fiscal year through these centers located in 22 states and the District of Columbia, according to the Labor Department's annual report for the 1978 fiscal year.

Census To Tally Transients On T-Night Mar. 31

Although you may be away from home on census day, April 1, the census bureau wants to find you at your temporary location and count you as a resident of your home city, county and state according to Carole Wilson, manager of census office in Bemidji.

This special project, part of the 1980 census of population and housing is called "T-night", the "T" standing for "Traveler" or "transient". "T-night" will be March 31 throughout the United States, Wilson said.

On "T-night", the night before census day, lodgers in hotels, motels and similar places (costing $4 per night or more) will be given individual census forms to complete. They provide space to indicate "usual place of residence". After these forms have been collected, they will be sorted at the local district office. Persons who indicate a home address elsewhere will be allocated to their appropriate home areas. Permanent residents will be counted as part of the local population where they are lodging.

Questionnaire For Census In Mail March 28

Questionnaires for the 1980 census of population and housing will be distributed by the postal service beginning March 28 to all households in this area, district manager Carole Wilson announced recently.

The forms should be filled out and kept in a safe place, ready for census takers to pick up when they start their rounds on March 31. The forms contain seven questions about each person in the household and 13 questions about the house. Most questions are answered by filling in the proper tiny circle with a common lead pencil, making a black dot which can be "read" by census bureau machines. The instruction guide, which comes with the questionaire, should be studied before answering the questions, Wilson said.

The census taker will check the questionnaire to see that all questions that apply to each person and to the house have been answered, and will give any assistance needed in filling out incomplete questionnaires.

At some households the census taker will seek answers to additional questions about each person and about the house that are being asked of a sample of the nation's population. In places of more than 3,500 population one household in six will be in the sample. In the less populated areas it will be one household in every two.

The manager emphasized the confidentiality of all information given in the census. No individual or household can be identified in the published statistical reports of the census. By federal law census information cannot be given to any other government agency, local officials, tax collectors, police, school officials, health or welfare officials; not to anyone.

Farm Tours Show Economic Impact To Area

cash grain portion of agricultural production."

Another way the situation can be considered, he said, is to think of the cash equivalents as comparable to 300 individual private businesses, each with average investment of three-quarters of a million dollars and $140,000 in annual cash sales available for local purchases.

Visitors to the Mehrkens farm viewed the line of farm tractors and machinery, discussed their uses, and looked at grain handling and storage equipment, operations and facilities.

Businessmen accompanying associate county agent Howard Person to the Hanson Heritage dairy farm located east of Thief River Falls saw a newly-built dairy barn and Grade A milk handling operation. Mark Hanson and his father, Martin, discussed their dairy herd, and showed the barn, milk house and feed and manure handling systems.

Person pointed out to people on the tour that Pennington county has 2,400 dairy cows — about one-fourth of one per cent of the cows in Minnesota. Average production is 9,200 pounds of milk per cow per year in Pennington county or about 3½ gallons per cow a day. Total production annually is 22,080,000 pounds (11,040 tons) of milk with a value of approximately $2,428,000 in sales.

If half of Red Lake county and half of Marshall county were included in the area total, Person said, there would be a gross value of $5,744,750 in raw milk produced in the average year. Grade A dairy farmers receive about 11 cents a pound or 95 cents a gallon for their product.

Person also outlined overhead costs for dairy production, noting that dairy cows are currently worth $1,000 to $1,500 each. He said a 1,200 pound cow will eat 45 pounds of moisture-free feed per day or 65 to 70 pounds of corn silage and grain. Feed for a 50-cow herd would cost $75 to $90 a day, he said, and feed costs account for 40 to 50 per cent of production costs.

Other costs to be considered in a dairy operation are breeding costs (keeping a bull or purchasing semen or breeding services), feeding and housing or purchasing replacement livestock, equipment, maintenance and upkeep of buildings and equipment, electricity and fuel costs and interest on borrowed capital.

Tours were made following serving of a light lunch at the chamber of commerce office.

Dear friends,

A young widow recently said it had been more difficult for her a year after the funeral of her husband than it was immediately after. Friends and relatives were thoughtful and concerned at first, but soon they seemed to forget her. Therein is a lesson for each of us.

Respectfully,

Conservation Prize Winners Selected

An Iowa senator, an Illinois wildlife research biologist and an educational TV program, have been named winners of the National Wildlife Federation's top conservation awards for 1979.

Sen. John Culver, Dr. Frank C. Bellrose of the Illinois natural history survey and NOVA, a Public Broadcasting System science program, head the list of 11 individuals and organizations named to receive the federation's annual "Connie" awards for achievement in the conservation field.

The "Connie" is a statuette of a whooping crane, an endangered bird symbolizing the conservation cause. The coveted awards, considered the most prestigious in their field, were presented at the NWF's 44th annual meeting in Miami Beach, Fla. March 22.

Culver was chosen by the NWF as the legislator of the year in recognition of his "consistent concern for the conservation of natural resources." Elected to the Senate in 1974 after serving 10 years in the House of Representatives, Culver now chairs the resource protection subcommittee. NWF cited him for his defense of the endangered species act plus his work on clean air legislation, the clean water act and a number of other important environmental issues.

Culver was also praised for his work as chairman of the government regulation and paperwork subcommittee of the select committee on small business, where he is reviewing the need for regulatory reform that will not, says NWF, "undo the progress we have made in protecting the environment, health, and safety."

Selected as the wildlife conservationist of the year, Dr. Bellrose, a wildlife specialist with the Illinois natural history survey, is a researcher, lecturer, writer and educator. He is an international authority on waterfowl migration, population dynamics, lead shot poisoning and the ecology of aquatic and march plants.

The NWF cited Bellrose for his work in several wildlife areas, including a study for the Department of the Interior on the effects of banning lead shot for waterfowl hunting, a study of the origin of migratory waterfowl wintering in Louisiana and an evaluation for the National Academy of Sciences on the Rampart dam project in Alaska.

The communications "Connie" will be accepted by Mick Rhodes, supervisor for WGBH-TV in Boston of NOVA, the Public Broadcasting System's science program. "Since its inception," NWF said, "Nova has set a high standard of professional sophistication in covering important scientific issues for the general public. When focusing on environmental issues, many of NOVA's individual programs emphasize the dependence on scientific inquiry that is necessary to resolve the hard problems of conservation."

NWF pointed to "Alaska: The Closing Frontier," "The Business of Extinction," and "The Desert's Edge," as among NOVA's most "accurate, objective, and highly entertaining" programs.

Other awards:

Conservation organization of the year — Izaak Walton League of America, Lee Dallager, president, for 50 years of effort in meeting its stated goal of conserving our "vanishing outdoor America," through advocacy of wilderness preservation, water pollution control and ethical hunting.

Environmental defense — Bruce H. Anderson, a Eugene, Ore., attorney, for winning a number of legal cases of national import while representing several national and state conservation organizations for no fee, or a reduced fee. His court victories include a decision by the U.S. District Court to "suspend aerial spraying of herbicides in national forests pending evaluation of non-toxic alternatives," and a decision by the Oregon Supreme Court expanding protection for coastal wetlands.

Distinguished affiliate *service — Tennessee con*servation league, Dr. Edward L. Thackston, president, for its growth to a fully-funded, professionally-operated conservation organization, and its "assistance in formulating a Tennessee air quality control law, a water quality law, surface mine reclamation law and non-game and endangered species act."

Special conservation achievement — Norman A. Berg, administrator of the soil conservation service, for the major role he played in "increasing agency emphasis on wildlife values when developing natural resources projects," and for his many achievements which have resulted in "better land use and wildlife habitat, better water quality and protection of prime farmlands and wetlands."

Special conservation achievement — J. Clark Akers III, of Nashville, Tenn., for his nine-year battle against the Memphis District of the Army Corps of Engineers to save the Obion and Forked Deer river basin from a 350-mile channelization project that could result in significant losses of wildlife habitat.

Special conservation achievement — Conservation law foundation of New England, Inc., Donald L. Connors, chairman of the board, for its dedication to the "conservation and preservation of New England's natural resources" through its assistance to individual citizens, conservation groups, and government agencies.

Special conservation achievement — George Reiger, of Locustville, Va., for his "authoritative and stimulating" articles on conservation and the wise use of natural resources. His thoroughly researched articles on such topics as the plight of the Atlantic bluefin tuna, the scandal of "living room zoos," and anti-trapping movement, and the commercialization of national parks, have helped to "reconcile conflicts among sportsmen, environmentalists, and policy-makers."

Special conservation achievement — Lynn Ludlow, prize-winning reporter for the San Francisco Examiner and lecturer in journalism at San Francisco State University, for his five-part article on California's Tuolumne River, where three new hydroelectric dams were planned. Ludlow's articles on the river's history and the proposals for its future development gave his readers "an opportunity to face the alternatives involved before a final decision was made."

SHOPPING AISLES and check-out areas of Northland Foods in Thief River Falls were filled Wednesday afternoon as members of the Thief River Falls Education association (TRFEA) staged a shop-in to demonstrate buying power of the school district's faculty. About 150 faculty members participated and spent more than $5,000 during the event. A TRFEA committee said the store was selected at random and emphasized that the TRFEA is not boycotting other local food markets.

ASCS To Mail Notices On Acreage, Yield

Pennington county farmers will soon be receiving a notice of your normal crop acreage (NCA) and established crop yields for the 1980 program year. It is one of the more important documents received from the county ASCS office every year and farmers are urged to study it carefully.

Those who feel that NCA or yields should be adjusted have 15 days from the date of the notice to file a written appeal to the county committee — and the 15-day period is very important, according to Phillip Bergland, county ASCS executive director.

"The county committee has the authority to hold a small amount of NCA acres and crop yield bushels in reserve, and moderate increases can be granted to those producers with the greatest need. These requests will be reviewed after the 15-day period and only after all appeals have been considered will increases be granted. After the adjustments have been granted, we will be "out of money" and no additional appeals can be accepted," Bergland said.

"Study the notice. If you feel you are entitled to an adjustment, we must hear from you within 15 days of the mailing of the ASCS-476 form," he said.

More Government Cost

When President Carter promised back in 1976 to cut the White House staff by at least a third, he must have failed to get the message across to his wife. A recent study of White House records by Congressman Clarence E. Miller of Ohio shows Mrs. Carter's personal staff now numbers 21 — compared to 12 employed by Mrs. Gerald Ford during her last year in the White House.

Cost of the personal staff to the taxpayers is about $650,000 a year. Congressman Miller points out that Vice President Walter Mondale has a staff of 26 aides — only five more than Mrs. Carter. Here are some of the costs involved as obtained by Congressman Miller after the Carter administration reportedly refused to show them to the press:

Mrs. Carter's top assistant — staff director Edith J. Dobelle — makes $56,000 per year, exactly the same amount paid President Carter's adviser on national security affairs, Zbigniew Brzezinski.

Other staff salaries include:

Mary Hoyt Finch, press secretary and "East Wing coordinator," $47,487; Madeline F. MacBean, personal assistant to Mrs. Carter, $45,175; Gretchen Poston, social secretary, $45,175.

Kathy Cade, director of projects, $36,925; Jane Fenderson, director of scheduling, $36,925; Carroll Ann Rambo, director of advance, $28,000; Faith Collins, deputy press secretary, $27,430; Paul Costello, assistant press secretary, $27,430.

Marilyn Funderburk, assistant social secretary, $25,000; Rita Merthan, personal secretary, $24,000; Amy Ryan, assistant to the social secretary, $20,157.

"Administrative assistants" on Mrs. Carter's staff range from $24,000 to $27,252.

Other aides — assistants to Mrs. Carter's assistants — earn salaries of between $16,000 and more than $18,000, according to the records. Lowest paid staff member serving Mrs. Carter is an assistant to an assistant in the press department, who earns $13,448.

Those $24,000 to $27,000 salaries for administrative assistants are in sharp contrast to what private industry pays for comparable posts in the Washington area. The daily newspaper help wanted sections generally list comparable jobs at salaries of about $18,000 to $20,000 per year.

A Crisis Stage

Following editorial is from the Wall Street Journal:

A consensus appears to be developing in Washington that cuts in the federal budget are essential to escape from our inflationary agonies. We can only welcome that belated dawning. What remains to be seen is whether the President and Congress are prepared to go beyond cosmetic cuts and do the kinds of things that will really help. There is not much to encourage us so far.

We can offer applause to those 43 Senators who jumped the gun on both the President and (much to Ed Muskie's annoyance) the Senate Budget Committee this week and demanded that $26 billion be extracted from the President's proposed 1981 budget. This would be done through a cap, proposed by Senators Roth and Proxmire, that would hold federal spending to 21 per cent of the Gross National Product.

A cap for 1981 would be fine, of course, but inflation is now. Inflation is accelerating and productivity is dropping in large part because the budget is out of control for fiscal 1980 — which does not end until next September. Spending for fiscal 1980 is now estimated at $564 billion, up $32 billion from what was originally budgeted for the year. With President Carter talking of an inflation at "a crisis stage", we wonder if anyone has any thoughts about curbing the voracious appetite this year. Or are we just supposed to live with 18 per cent inflation until we can get around to doing something about it in September?

It should be pretty evident that we can't afford to do that. The Fed, saddled with the entire task of controlling inflation and being loaded with more boulders every time the Treasury comes into the market, has been forced to put a genuine crowding-out squeeze on private lending. The bloodshed of bond houses, savings and loans and country banks needs staunching. The best kind of treatment — the only treatment if we look at some of the horrid alternatives being proposed is for the federal government to quickly offload some of its current spending, and thus reduce the Treasury's net demand on the capital markets.

Such a proposal brings cries of shock on Capitol Hill: "How can we do that?" The answer is simple. Just as Congress can pass bills appropriating money, it can pass bills suspending appropriations. How about trying the latter for a change?

In the present climate of Washington, there will be a temptation to try to cut spending across the board or not at all. We might settle for across-the-board cuts in preference to nothing at all, but it is basically a mindless approach. The money being spent through CETA to hire college graduates to catalog historic houses is somewhat less important, we would say, than running the Indian Ocean fleet and protecting vital oil lines there. Anyone who thinks billions couldn't be cut from the federal budget overnight with only good effects hasn't taken a look at that document. But there will be Congressmen prepared to fight tooth and nail against cuts in CETA, EDA, CSA or hundreds of other money-wasting schemes.

Indeed, there are Congressmen still yelling for more, unbelievable as it may sound in light of our economic problems. The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, chaired by Senator Harrison Williams of New Jersey, has just voted for a 25 per cent increase in budget authority next fiscal year for the projects under its jurisdiction. Senator Eagleton's Sub-committee on Aging contributed to this large boost by demanding a 202 per cent increase. Senator Cranston's Child and Human Development unit got a 31.3 per cent boost. Senator Nelson's Sub-committee on Poverty and Migratory Labor wanted a 26.4 per cent increase but Senator Metzenbaum got the full committee to raise it to 31 per cent. You can see what the budget cutting forces are up against.

We welcome the attention the federal budget finally is getting. We welcome the administration's forswearance of wage and price controls and Chairman Volcker's resistance to further efforts to rig the credit markets. But experience has taught us caution. We'll reserve our full opinion until the music ends.

Giving The People A Voice

Following editorial is from the Pope County Tribune:

There is no doubt that a vast majority of Minnesotans want more of a voice in the making or repealing of laws. The polls show such a lopsided approval of initiative and referendum there can be no doubt about this.

In a capsule, initiative allows state residents to propose legislation, and referendum allows them to repeal legislation. It was one of Gov. Al Quie's major campaign proposals two years ago.

And, now it appears that Minnesotans will get I and R since the senate DFL majority, which has up until now consistently opposed it, suddenly decided to withdraw its opposition.

The DFL holds a lopsided margin in the senate, and if the senate wasn't receptive to I and R, it would have virtually no chance of seeing the governor's desk, but now that majority leader Nick Coleman and his fellow DFL'ers have withdrawn their opposition, there seems little chance that it won't be passed.

However, it will likely be a watered down I and R bill that is finally sent to the governor for his signature, and we hope that it will be worded in such a way that state residents don't vote on every bizarre proposal that comes along.

We have a lot of respect for the intellect of Minnesotans. They have shown over the years to be not only respectful of the law, but aware of government and very knowledgeable in comparison to voters of other states. So, if you're going to have initiative and referendum, this is an ideal state for it.

Coleman is reported to have said, in explaining why he dropped his opposition, that if 85 per cent of the people support something, either you do or your successor does. Now Coleman isn't running for re-election, but most of his DFL senate colleagues are, and continuing to fight a measure with such widespread voter support could be a fatal mistake come November.

I and R isn't a perfect form of instituting and killing legislation. Far from it. But Minnesotans, frustrated by government in general, want more of a voice in how their government is run, and I and R will give them that voice.

It's certainly worth a try.

UNIQUE EASTER BUNNY is this French lop ear rabbit on display in the ZooLab area of the Minnesota state zoo at Apple Valley. The rabbit has ears up to six inches wide and 16 inches long and resembles a cross between a rabbit and a basset hound. It can weigh up to 10 pounds and is the result of a mutation — a sudden variation in inheritable characteristic — and first appeared in England in 1810.

Unique Easter Bunny Shown At State Zoo

The French lop ear rabbit is a species that first appeared in England in 1810 and is this year's official Easter bunny at the Minnesota zoo in Apple Valley.

The rabbit's long floopy ears can measure 16 inches long and six inches wide — a rarity among the 65 bunny species. The elongated ears are the result of a mutation, which is defined as a sudden variation in some inheritable characteristic. This species was so highly esteemed in England that it became the only national exhibition race for many years.

Soon after its introduction in England, further mutations occurred that resulted in a German and French variety. Although the rabbit and the deer share few similarities, in both species the males are called bucks and the females does. Another noteworthy distinction about this variety is that the females outweigh the males by 10 per cent.

In folklore and in history, the rabbit has played a priminent part. The story of the popular Easter bunny is said to date back to a Teutonic legend, in which the rabbit was once a bird, but was changed to its present form by the goddess Ostara. In appreciation for this unusual service, the rabbits laid eggs for the spring festival of the goddess. The superstition of the lucky rabbit's foot originated long ago when people took the left hind foot of a rabbit and placed it in a churchyard at midnight during a full moon so it would protect its owner from evil.

This special Easter bunny is on exhibit in the ZooLab along with 50 other animal species in a unique touch n' feel experience for kids and grownups. Admission prices to the zoo are adults 17 and over, $3; ages 12-16, $1.50; ages 6-11, $1; seniors 62 and over $1.50; and children under five are admitted free. Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

In regards to your editorial, "Athletics — A Uniting Force," you write that the athletes are being deprived because they didn't get their recognition at banquets. Don't you think that this is minor compared to hard working teachers trying to live on less than adequate salaries? If you want to stab somebody in the back, why don't you put some blame on the school board members, who are sitting on the money meant for the teachers, collecting interest.

If the school board had acted this Fall instead of stalling on the contracts, the kids would be having their banquets. The teachers have been extremely patient and working with out a contract for seven months. I know of no other union that would put up with this kind of treatment for so long.

Obviously you think the teachers' rights aren't important. If the public had supported the teachers in the beginning this whole thing would have been settled long ago.

Sincerely,
Leann Steiger

To the Editor:

Please support the bill amending the PELRA law. The present method is really unfair to teachers and encourages local school boards to go to arbitration rather than negotiate locally. It seems to be a strategy for the school boards to manipulate our money and earn thousands of dollars of interest off our unpaid salaries. Because of unsettled contracts many teachers are under such great duress that our morale has dropped to rock bottom.

I am afraid that many of the good teachers will find jobs in the business world in order to support their families adequately. Then, what will happen to our children?

Our school board is the third highest paid in the state and the teachers in Thief River Falls have one of the lowest paid salaries in the northwest region of schools of comparable size.

The school board can afford to pay for quality education. It is predicted that there will soon be a teacher shortage in the state of Minnesota. How many teachers will be able to afford to stay in Thief River Falls on some of the lowest teacher salaries in the state? What will happen to the quality of education if teachers begin leaving the community of Thief River Falls?

I feel that I am a dedicated teacher and put in many extra hours that are not included in my wages. Does dedication pay bills? My husband and I are both teachers, home owners and have no children yet. We can barely make ends meet and will have to find a summer employment to live throughout the summer. I know that we are not the only teachers looking for summer employment to supplement our income. Many teacher friends have second jobs year round to provide adequately for their families.

We trust that as tax payers for the community of Thief River Falls, you will support the PELRA law and we as teachers can continue to give the quality education our children deserve.

Sincerely,
-s-Jean Buhl

Fire Education Meet Set At AVTI March 31

Fire is a killer. When it injures, the scars are there for life and deaths and injuries from fire in Minnesota are increasing, not decreasing.

The only people who can prevent fires are the people who have them — homeowners, homemakers, students, preschoolers, employers, employees — in short, men, women and children. An effort is being made to help them "learn not to burn".

To help in this effort, Thief River Falls AVTI will be co-hosting a "Public Fire Education Workshop" March 31 at 7:30 p.m. in room 114. The workshop is offered by the University of Minnesota's fire information, research and education (FIRE) center, through a small grant from the United States fire administration and consumer product safety commission.

According to FIRE center director Antona Richardson, the workshop is designed for educators, civic and youth group leaders and members, institutional and industrial safety and fire department personnel — "those people who can have a real impact on fire and burn prevention," Richardson said.

There is no charge for this program.

Power Plant Siting Survey Being Taken

Minnesota environmental quality board has asked its power plant siting advisory committee to consider the effects of siting electrical generating plants of various sizes, including plants smaller than the recent electric power industry trend.

The advisory committee, made up of 25 citizens of Minnesota, is asking the citizens of the state for their views and suggestions regarding this issue.

To obtain these views, the advisory committee has developed a questionnaire regarding smaller power plants. This questionnaire may be obtained by writing to the Power Plant Siting Advisory Committee, Room 15, 550 Cedar Street, St. Paul, Minnesota 55101. Results of this questionnaire will be included in the committee's report that will be completed late this summer. A copy of this report can be obtained by writing to the above address.

The power plant siting advisory committee has been established by law to advise the Minnesota environmental quality board on issues relating to siting new electric generating plants. The environmental quality board is the state agency responsible for determining the locations for new electric generating plants of greater than 50 megawatts capacity.

Counseling Center For Veterans Will Open Wednesday

Veterans administration's newest program, a unique outreach activity aimed at Vietnam-era veterans with readjustment problems, will begin in North Dakota on Wednesday, March 26 with the opening of a VA counseling center at 1300 13½ Street south in Fargo.

Public is invited to attend the official opening ceremony at 1 p.m. as well as the open house which will continue through 3:30 p.m.

Vet Center will be one of 87 to be opened officially across the country. They are being established under a provision of the Veterans Health Care Amendments Act of 1979, signed into law by President Carter last June. Program provides for informal, low-key psychological counseling for Vietnam-era veterans who have had difficulty on reentering civilian life.

All centers are to be housed away from established VA facilities, in storefronts or other locations thought to be convenient to large numbers of veterans needing their services. The centers are to be as free of conventional government regulations and red tape as possible.

Eligibility for help will not be based on a medical examination or diagnosis and veterans need not make prior contact with VA offices or hospitals.

Vet Center in Fargo will provide services to Vietnam-era veterans in North Dakota and the Northwest part of Minnesota. Housed in a converted residence, it consists of three private counseling rooms, a large rap session room, and a reception area. It is furnished comfortably and informally with non-governmental type furniture.

As long as 10 years ago persons close to the scene began advocating special counseling for Vietnam-era veterans who needed extra help to overcome the trauma of fighting an unpopular war and then returning to an uncertain homecoming. One of the earliest and most persistent advocates was Max Cleland, a decorated young army captain from Georgia, who had returned from Vietnam minus both legs and his right arm as the result of a grenade explosion. In 1969, he told a Congressional committee:

"The inevitable psychological depression after injury, coupled with doubts that it may not have been worth it, comes later like a series of secondary explosions after the excitement of the battlefield is far behind, the reinforcement of your comrads-in-arms a thing of the past. . .Anyone who deals with a Vietnam returnee, wounded or not, must understand this delayed psychological symptom. . .It is not when you are lying there in the military hospital with you comrades around you. . .that things get tight for you psychologically and emotionally. It is when you begin getting back into a life that you always assumed you would enter and. . .find yourself kind of unable for a temporary period of time to get back in there. That is when you are alone with your thoughts and your injury."

Cleland, who was appointed by President Carter to head the VA in 1977, said the heart of the Vet center program "will be counseling to give assistance without what some people regard as the stigma of a psychiatric diagnosis.

"If we find it is advisable, and the veteran requests it, we can supplement our own services with private psychological care or by admission to the Veterans administration's regular mental health program."

Vet center in Fargo will be manned by a four person team of experts specially trained to counsel Vietnam-era veterans and their families on problems resulting from the veterans' service. In addition to individual, group and family counseling, team members will assist veterans in career and educational development.

"Basically," Cleland said, "the program is a no-frills, low-key approach to helping that relatively small group of young Vietnam-era veterans who have failed to get the help they need because they are turned off by bureaucratic red tape and long waiting lines.

"We will be trying to give help to a bunch of veterans who, for many reasons, have not been able to put their Vietnam experiences behind them. They gave much and lost much in service to our nation. It is right that we should extend ourselves to help them help themselves."

Say Feed Grain Program Should Not Be Opened

Cy Carpenter, president of the Minnesota farmers union (MFU) recently objected to a proposal before Congress to open up the 1979 feed grain program to non-participants as a means of isolating excess grain from the market.

The 1970 feed grain reserve program, part of the 1977 farm act, is designed to help stabilize the market for both farmers and consumers. It has worked substantially well and has proven its value. However, Carpenter commented, its starting prices were too low.

Addressing his objection to the Minnesota congressional delegation, Carpenter said that the proposal to admit non-participants would erode the fundamental principle of voluntary farm programs. Such a move would hurt current program participants and destroy their confidence in future programs.

Carpenter said that he recognized the severity of the current situation but that the government should direct its efforts to income-producing programs such as increasing the support loan level to the benefit of both farmers and the balance of payments. In his statement, he said, "It appears that the office of management and budget is providing overriding persuasion with the USDA in this proposal as it has with other agencies in the past."

Carpenter said recent efforts by USDA to isolate embargoed grain from the market through purchase have not worked. He went on to say that if such action is necessary, the current participants in the program must not be penalized. The non-participants must not be allowed to put their grain into reserve unless none is available from the current participants.

If the non-participants are accepted, he requested that not more than one-half of their production be stored and further requested that non-participants just entering the program not be forgiven the first year of interest payments.

Supporting secretary of agriculture Bob Bergland's earlier position, Carpenter urged the Minnesota congressional delegation to give proper direction to these concerns as the proposal comes up in committee of on the floor. He also requested that no future modifications of this type be applied to farm programs during times of temporary excess of grain as they interfere with normal activity and participation in those programs.

Copies of the letter were sent to vice president Walter Mondale and Bergland.

EIGHTY-FOUR STUDENTS IN fifth grade and older registered for the Jaycee Women's babysitting clinic set March 22 and 29, according to Muriel Olin and Marijo Nabben, chairwomen of the project. Occupational development center rooms were full Saturday during the first meeting of the two-part session, in which Duane Noel, Thief River Falls fire chief, discussed and demonstrated home and fire safety; Jim Haugen of the Thief River Falls police department discussed general babysitting safety precautions, and Larry Golightly, emergency medical technician, demonstrated cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) techniques.

STUDENTS LISTENED INTENTLY Saturday to speakers during the first session of a two-part babysitting clinic sponsored by the Thief River Falls Jaycee women. Speakers for the first session included Duane Noel, Thief River Falls fire chief, Jim Haugen, Thief River Falls police officer, and Larry Golightly, emergency medical technician. Upon completion of the two sessions, students will be given a take-home test for which they will receive a babysitting certificate if they successfully complete the exam. Next session is set for March 29.

AHSA Invites Comment On 1980-81 Plan

Board of directors of the Agassiz health systems agency has released its draft health systems plan for 1980-81 and will receive public comments at a hearing to be held Thursday, at 1 p.m. at the American Inn, East Grand Forks.

Agassiz's 1980-81 plan provides an overview of health needs and service resources in this 22 county area. Plan also recommends ways to improve the delivery of services. Priority goals established in the plan are:

(1) Reduce the current Agassiz mortality rate of accidents to 61 per 100,000

Copies of the draft health systems plan are available at Northwest Regional Development Commission, 425 Woodland Avenue, Crookston or the public library located in Thief River Falls.

All area residents are invited to attend the public hearing and to present written or oral testimony. The greater the community comment, the more reflective of community needs and concerns the Plan will be.

Stangeland: House Action Inadequate

"The House of Representatives has passed the conference report on the agriculture adjustment act but it is too little, too late for our farmers," states Congressman Arlan Stangeland.

"This bill has been termed by my colleagues as the least we can do for farmers," he said, "and it is the least we can do, because if we did less we would do nothing at all. We had no adjustment in farm prices in 1979 and the adjustment in 1980 is virtually a slap in the face to the agriculture industry. With an inflation rate of 18 per cent, with costs of production rising the way they are and with farm prices dropping, this bill will do little if anything to revitalize agriculture," Stangeland said.

The agriculture adjustment act increases target prices for wheat for the 1980 crop year to $3.63 a bushel, raises the target prices for corn for the 1980 crop year to $2.35 a bushel, and gives the agriculture department authority to raise the target price for wheat and corn in the 1981 crop year to cover increases in production costs.

In addition, the act extends the disaster payments program through the 1980 crop year for producers of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton and rice, and increases from $50,000 to $100,000 the limit on how much one producer may receive in disaster payments for the 1980 and 1981 crops.

"The farmer and the agriculture community are the foundation of our economy and this segment of our society is in trouble," the congressman said. "Farm programs are not adequate to maintain a healthy farm economy. The current administration and those members of Congress who have not taken the time to fully understand the importance of agriculture to America had better wake up and help those of us who understand the needs write and adopt a farm bill that adequately compensates the farmer and insures a healthy agriculture community."

Summer Youth Programs To Be Offered

This year, as in the past, Inter-County Community council, Inc., Oklee, will be operating two summer youth employment programs in the Region 1 area (counties of Kittson, Roseau, Marshall, Norman, Polk, Pennington and Red Lake). The two programs are the summer youth employment program (SYEP), and the governor's youth program (GYP).

Even through the two programs are run consecutively, they are quite different insofar as the guidelines are concerned.

The CETA program, SYEP, is a federally funded program designed to serve only low income youths ages 14-21. The income guildeines that are used to determine whether or not a youth is low income consists of a graduated scale based on the family's income for the past twelve months and how many people are currently living at home.

Governor's youth program, GYP, is a state funded program under which one-half of the participants must be low income, but the other one-half need not be low income. The Governor's youth program, therefore, is not solely for "high" income participants, but rather is a combination of 50 per cent from each income category.

Both programs will begin approximately the third week of June and will run for eight or ten weeks. Last year, participants worked 32 or 40 hours per week. Hours for this year have not been established, but will probably be similar to last year's programs. All participants will receive the federal minimum wage of $3.10 per hour. All worksites must be either in the public sector or non-profit organizations.

Last year, youths were selected for their jobs by committees made up of persons from their local area. This year, due to privacy laws, this policy may need to be changed.

Applications will be available at Community action agencies, vocational cooperative centers, high schools, CETA offices, job services offices, social service agencies, and area university, college or AVTI counseling offices.

If you wish to submit an application for summer employment, please return it to the community action agency which is responsible for the county in which you live. Persons in the Region 1 area are served by the following agencies:

Inter-county community council, Inc., Box 187, Oklee, MN 56742, 218-796-5144, serves East Polk, Pennington, and Red Lake counties. Tri Valley Opportunity council, Inc., 114 S. Main, Crookston, MN 56716, 218-281-5832, serves West Polk, Norman, and West Marshall counties.

Also, Northwest community action, Inc., Box 195, Badger, MN 56714, 218-528-3258, serves Roseau, Kittson, East Marshall counties.

If you do not live in the counties in Region 1, contact the community action agency which covers the county in which your high school is located, and they will be able to refer you to the correct agency.

Any questions or comments regarding the summer youth employment programs operating in Region 1 may be directed to: Mary Lou Harthun, Regional youth programs coordinator, inter-county community council, Inc., Box 187, Oklee, MN 56742, 218-796-5144.

Further information regarding exact starting dates and specific details of the two programs will be published at a later date.

To escape the northern frigid air Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wiseth of Goodridge took an excursion flight to California's coast. They landed in Las Vegas in a downpour of rain. Out of the 50 thousand rooms in Las Vegas, there was no room to get, and wall to wall with people in the casinos. They spent a few hours there and boarded a bus out to St. George, Utah, where they spent the week with their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Hughes. While there, they went sight seeing and enjoyed seeing the movie, "Electric Horseman", which was filmed in St. George. Thursday they took in the tour to Annaheim, Calif., by bus and saw Jimmy Durante's home, orange groves, and had a glimpse of Dr. Schuler's crystal cathedral. They spent the day in Disneyland, which is hard to describe — the rides, the exhibits — the whole place is out of this world.

On Friday they enjoyed a four-hour sail boat cruise out in the Pacific ocean. It was a beautiful sunny day, watching the crashing of the waves and the California gray whales.

Saturday they spent touring an old town.

Sunday they had an entertaining day at the Gail Brunston home, formerly Gale Urdahl of Goodridge, who entertained the Wiseths out to a Chinese breakfast and a visit to her home, where they viewed her many beautiful flowers, orange and lemon trees which were loaded with fruit. Later they all visited at the homes of Gail's sister, Audrey and her husband, and Mr. and Mrs. Bun Stephansons.

They also went across the border to survey the Mexican territory. They noticed the crowded streets, the careless traffic and the huge signs advertising divorces and marriages.

Tuesday they flew back to the Cities where Robert had an appointment for more treatments at at the Northwestern hospital. Ethel continued her flight back to Thief River Falls.

TRF AAU Swimming Program Expands

Interest in the Thief River Falls AAU swimming program continues to grow under the direction of Dan Vrudny, who is beginning his second season as coach of the program that features about 85 swimmers on the roster, a nearly 50 per cent increase over last year's turnout, which was double the number of swimmers on the team in 1978.

Thief River Falls AAU swim club members practice weekdays from 4 to 6 p.m. at the Franklin middle school pool. The program is open to all ages and right now includes swimmers ranging in age from seven to 19.

An expanded schedule will find Thief River Falls swimming 10 dual meets — five at home and five on the road — against the likes of Bemidji, Moorhead, Fosston, Detroit Lakes, Grand Rapids and possibly Crookston, along with four or five weekend invitational meets at sites like Alexandria, Morris, St. Cloud, Winnipeg, Moorhead and Fargo, followed by the state AAU meet in early August in the Twin Cities area. An invitational meet at Morris in mid-May will kick off the 1980 season for Thief River Falls AAU swimmers.

Because of the larger numbers and expanded schedule, the Thief River Falls AAU swim club, first organized in 1974, is purchasing a bus to transport the team members.

Vrudny, whose wife Lesley, serves as an assistant coach, invites interested swimmers who are not already involved in the AAU program to stop by at the pool during practice time or call him at 964-5381. A summer practice schedule will find the AAU swimmers in the pool from 7 to 9 a.m. or 8:30 to 10 p.m. weekdays. There is a $25 fee to compete as a Thief River Falls AAU swim club member, with the money used to pay coaches salary, pool rental and state and national AAU dues.

To create additional interest in the sport, Vrudny has announced plans to state an elementary school swimming clinic and meet April 21-25 for students in grades 1-5. Clinic sessions will be held throughout the week, with a meet for elementary students planned Fri., Feb. 25.

Girls Draw Near-Record Crowd

An estimated 2,000 fans who were on hand in Detroit Lakes Fri., March 14, to watch the Detroit Lakes vs. Little Falls Region 8AA girls basketball tournament championship game represents the third largest crowd ever to watch a basketball game at the school, according to Ralph Anderson of the Detroit Lakes Tribune.

The paid attendance for the game was 1,765, and with the bands, halftime entertainers, press and others admitted on passes, Detroit Lakes activities director Del Mollberg feels the crowd was right around 2,000.

Biggest crowd ever to watch a basketball game in Detroit Lakes was on Jan. 31, 1970 when the Lakers beat Moorhead 65-59 when an estimated 2,300 fans were on hand. Some 2,200 were watching when Detroit Lakes beat Bemidji 63-55 on Feb. 18, 1961.

Little Falls, of course, beat Detroit Lakes 58-48 and went on to capture the 1980 Minnesota Class AA state basketball tournament championship last week at the Met Sports Center in Bloomington.

Miscellaneous

+ Section 8 high school hockey champion East Grand Forks is already looking ahead to the 1980-81 season. The Green Wave lost twice in the 1980 Minnesota state high school hockey tournament, but East Grand Forks coach Tony Palmiscno noted, "It was our first trip. In the six periods down there we never did play like we had in Section 8. I was a little disappointed with our play down there, but we had a very good year. Our goal was to get to the state tournament and we did. Now when we go back we'll be a little more knowledgeable. We're going to have a good team next year. (Mark) Pagnac will be back in goal, and with a little improvement, he could be one of the best in the state. We'll need some defensemen, but we'll have some forwards. In fact a lot of them. Teamwise, it (next year) could be an excellent year."

+ If you think the names on the Grand Rapids high school hockey roster never change, you're right, reports Jim Carrington of the Bemidji Pioneer. The 1980 state tournament champion Indians' line-up included Tom Rothstein, the fourth Rothstein brother to play for Grand Rapids, with a fifth, Paul, yet to come; Todd and Erick Lempe, the third and fourth Lempe brothers to play for the Indians; Bob Madson, the fifth Madson to play in the state tournament; John DeCenzo, the third member of the DeCezno family to play for the Indians; and while goalie John Casey graduates, brother David will be back again next winter.

Northwomen Seeking Two Top Recruits

Northland community college women's basketball team won just four games in 20 starts this winter, but coach Deb Jacobson knows exactly what it will take to turn things around in 1980-81: Diane Fisher and Kim Brekke.

"I'm expecting everybody back next year," said Jacobson when talking about the five freshmen on this year's ball club "and it'll be a good corps to work with. What we need, though, is one tall girl and one shooter."

Brekke and Fisher would fill the order perfectly. Both became 1,000-point scorers as area high school seniors this winter as the six-foot Brekke led Warren to the Minnesota Class A state tournament and the 5-8 Fisher established a new Region 8A scoring record with 1,353 points while shooting 46 per cent from the field this season at Plummer.

They're Northland's top recruiting targets.

It was a one-two punch by sophomore center Julie Anderson of East Grand Forks and freshman forward Julie Easton of Thief River Falls that led Northland during the 1979-80 campaign. They both finished with 215 points and a 10.8 scoring average for the Northwomen who scored an average of 46.8 points per game as a team.

"I was very pleased with Julie Anderson," explained Jacobson. "She became a very good shooter and she developed a few good moves."

"Julie Easton," continued Jacobson, "turned out to be our biggest freshman asset."

Easton led the Northwomen with a 36 per cent shooting mark from the field, hitting 93 of 258 shots. Anderson was the busiest shooter on the team, making 88 of 346 attempts for 25 per cent. They were also among the leaders at the free throw line where Anderson was 39-for-67 for 58 per cent and Easton was 29-for-57 for 51 per cent.

In addition to scoring, Anderson and Easton kept busy in other areas of the game.

Easton pulled down a team-high 219 rebounds, averaging 11 per game; was credited with 18 assists, second highest figure on the club; and came up with 69 loose ball recoveries, again second highest on the team.

Anderson grabbed 176 rebounds, averaging 8.8 per game was credited with 65 loose ball recoveries, third highest figure on the team; and blocked a team-leading 28 shots.

Freshman forward Jacki Nelson of Hallock also ranked among the team statistical leaders, averaging 6.4 points per game, which was third best behind Anderson and Easton; grabbing 213 rebounds, averaging a team-high 11.2 per game for 19 starts; and handed out a team-leading 29 assists.

Tracey Nelson, a sophomore guard from Middle River, led the Northwomen with 112 loose ball recoveries, averaging 5.6 per game; and freshman guard Jean Stukel of Warroad was the top Northland free throw shooter among the regulars, hitting 15 of 24 attempts for 63 per cent.

"It was a very good group of girls to work with," mentioned Jacobson. "Record-wise it wasn't the best year, but the record is not a true indication of what our season was really like. At least five of those games (losses) should have been ours, and a couple of others were maybe's."

"We improved over the year," noted Jacobson. "And I guess that's the biggest thing. We improved in the areas of teamwork, rebounding and defense."

A season-long problem, however, came in the turnover department. The Northwomen lost the ball 570 times this winter, averaging 28.5 turnovers per game. Handling the ball most of the time as guards, Tracey Nelson was charged with 102 turnovers and Stukel had 77, a figure matched by Easton.

"Turnovers were our biggest problem," admitted Jacobson. "But we improved in that area, too. We cut those down quite a bit our last five games."

Northland wins this winter came over Bottineau 47-31, Itasca 48-38, Rainy River 68-38 and Crookston 41-39.

Losses came at the hands of Bottineau 58-43, Jamestown college junior varsity 71-43, Devils Lake Independents 57-41, Willmar 62-53, Itasca 45-44, Lake Region 102-45, Mesabi 64-51, Vermilion 55-35, Hibbing 71-68, Fergus Falls 90-40 and 64-50, Crookston 57-52, Brainerd 45-35 and 54-38, University of North Dakota junior varsity 71-48 and Anoka-Ramsey 58-45.

Lincoln Girls Gain Basketball Experience In 1979-80 Season

Experience — a missing ingredient this winter — should prove to be a strong point for the 1980-81 Lincoln high school girls basketball team. Four of the five starters will return next year for the Prowlers who had just four seniors on this year's ball club that finished 6-12.

Leading the underclassmen on this year's team was junior guard Ann Goodrich, the Prowlers' leading scorer and most consistent performer. Thief River Falls' 1979-80 statistical sheet, which showed game averages, had Goodrich with an 11-point scoring average, a 40 per cent shooting figure from the field and a 60 per cent shooting mark from the free throw line — all team high numbers. She was also the team's top ball handler and play maker. Her third year of starting in 1980-81 will find her serving as team captain.

"Ann played pretty steady for us most of the season," pointed out Thief River Falls coach Sylvia Sjoberg who was also pleased with the rebounding work done by front line performers Tara Nicholson, LeAnn Paetznick and Roberta Engel, the only senior in the starting line-up. "We rebounded pretty well all season," mentioned Sjoberg.

Nicholson, a sophomore who moved up from the junior varsity after the season started to nail down the center job for the Prowlers, averaged nine points per game and pulled down a team-leading 12 rebounds per game. Engel, named the Prowlers' most valuable player by a vote among team members, averaged eight points and six rebounds per game. Paetznick, a sophomore who was named the team's most improved player, averaged four points and eight rebounds per game.

The fifth starter was a junior guard Kim McFarland, who averaged three points per game.

"We'll have a little more experience next year," acknowledged Sjoberg, who hopes the experience will produce better basketball skills. "You hope they'll improve from year to year," she said, but noted that most of the improvement requires a summer full of basketball by the girls themselves.

Lincoln Girls Gain Basketball Experience

And the improvement will be needed if the Prowlers are to turn their record around against the likes of Detroit Lakes, Moorhead and Fergus Falls, all North Half Region 8AA opponents who boast strong girls basketball programs.

One area where the Prowlers must show a definite improvement is shooting. Thief River Falls shot just 28 per cent from the field this winter and shot only 46 per cent from the free throw line while averaging 41 points per game.

While Goodrich was shooting 40 per cent from her guard position, Nicholson, Engel and Paetznick all shot 33 per cent or less on the front line and had the same figures at the free throw line.

"Our shooting wasn't as good as I thought it would be," admitted Sjoberg.

Thief River Falls' six wins this winter came against Fisher 32-30, Roseau 49-44, McIntosh-Winger 42-28, Greenbush 53-37, Bemidji 31-30 and Crookston 42-41. The Prowlers lost to Park Rapids 43-37, Warren 59-20, Moorhead 52-45, Bemidji 49-44, Crookston 45-42, East Grand Forks 52-35 and 42-38, Fertile-Beltrami 55-47, Fergus Falls 51-38, Fosston 61-52 and Detroit Lakes 68-45, with the Lakers adding a 64-48 decision over the Prowlers in the opening game of the North Half Region 8AA tournament.

The record, said Sjoberg, "was pretty much as expected," but still proved to be "disappointing."

Sjoberg's first Thief River Falls team finished 8-12 in 1978-79. Thief River Falls' first interscholastic girls basketball team finished 4-7 in the fall of 1973. The Prowlers were 12-4 in the winter of 1974-75; 4-11 in 1975-76; 16-2 and Region 8AA Sub Region 4 champions in 1976-77; and 15-5 in 1977-78 for a seven-year won-lost mark of 65-53.

Lincoln junior varsity team, coached by Tom Schafer, finished 8-9 this winter and the Lincoln freshmen, coached by Lynn Dyer, were 4-11. Patti Blackstad was named the most improved played on the junior varsity team and Christy Stromlund was named the most improved played on the freshman team.

Next will be a lecture by Main entitled, "Gaylord's Play Action Pass Series." Fortier follows with his lecture on "The Flex Defense." Coach Walker follows with a lecture called, "Organization of the Richfield high school program."

Fortier has finished 10 successful seasons at Moorhead State, where his team posted an 8-3-0 record last fall and was considered for post-season play. Fortier has led MSU to Northern Intercollegiate Conference championships in 1971-1973 and 1979. A Bemidji native, Fortier played at North Dakota State. After coaching at Melrose high school and a three-year stint as an assistant at NDSU, he took over the MSU reins in 1970.

Edwards has been the UND head trainer six years. He is a graduate of Southern Illinois University, where he lettered three times as a swimmer. After further study at the University of Pittsburgh he became a licensed physical therapist. He was a prep coach at Kenosha, Wis.; head trainer at Ferris (Mich.) State; worked with the Detroit Pistons and Detroit Tigers in 1969-70; and from 1970 to 1973 was assistant head trainer at United States Air Force Academy.

Walker has been head football coach at Richfield 10 years, compiling a record of 81-19-2. He has a lifetime record of 107-30-5. A graduate of Eastern Illinois and the University of Illinois, he coached at Illinois high schools and at Coe (Iowa) College before going to Richfield where his teams have been in the Class AA Minnesota state prep football playoffs in 1972, 1975, 1977 and 1979. They were the state runners-up in 1975 and 1979. Richfield has won five Lake Conference titles and two co-championships under his expert guidance.

Ley has been head man at Rugby since 1973 and has posted a record of 45-21 in that period. He has directed Rugby's Panthers to two North Star Conference championships and four second place finishes in that time. He is a Valley City (N.D.) State graduate and was an assistant at Rugby nine years before moving up to the head job.

Gremmels coached Dakota high at Arthur to the North Dakota state nine-man championship in 1979 and has compiled a 43-6 record there in the past five seasons. Prior to moving to Arthur he coached five seasons at Lisbon (N.D.) high.

Main led Gaylord to the Minnesota Class B state championships in 1975 and again in 1979. His overall coaching record at Gaylord if 67-8. In seven seasons there his teams have won five conference championships. Prior to coaching Gaylord he spent three seasons at Jeffers, Minn., and four seasons at Gibbon, Minn. He played his college ball at Mankato State. Main was named Minnesota Class B coach of the year in 1979 and has been named coach of the outstate team for the Minnesota all-star game this summer.

Guidelines For Free Fishing License Set

Are you entitled to a free fishing license?

Could be, according to Bob Wells, license supervisor for the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources.

Wells said the Department receives numerous calls from persons who have heard they may be able to obtain a fishing license without cost or at a reduced rate.

These are the facts, he said:

+Residents of Minnesota under the age of 16 are not required to have an angling, spearing or netting license.

+A citizen of Minnesota receiving supplemental security income for the aged, blind or disabled will be issued a fishing license without charge.

+Minnesota residents serving in U.S. military or naval forces or Reserves, stationed outside the state, may fish without a license when in Minnesota on leave provided they have their leave or furlough papers on their person.

+A permanent license to take fish will be issued at the prevailing fee to any citizen of Minnesota 16 years or older whose parent or legal guardian furnishes proof of mentally retarded disability to the county auditor or license agent. A permanent license is valid for the life of the holder.

+A permanent license to take fish will be issued to Minnesota veterans having a 100 per cent service connected disability.

+Residents of Minnesota who have attained the age of 65 may take fish by angling or spearing without a license, but must carry proof of age and residence on their person.

+Residents receiving aid under the railroad retirement act of 1937 or who are former employees of the U.S. postal service and receiving disability pay may take fish by angling or spearing without a license.

+Patients of a U.S. Veterans Administration hospital may fish without a license so long as they are patients.

+Patients or inmates of a state mental or correctional institution may fish without a license subject to written consent of the superintendent of the institution.

SKI REPORT

by Dr. Hugh Patterson

About three miles from Park West ski area is one of Americas' great ski areas, Park City, Utah. With a gondola and tin chairs, it can handle well many skiers, on a wide variety of runs for skiers of every skill. This is an area where a low intermediate skier can come all the way down from the top.

First a word about the very colorful and friendly town from which it takes its name. A picturesque community, it provides excellent accommodation and all the services. There are several gourmet restaurants. It has a bus that will get you conveniently around the town.

Park City ski area has about thirty-one hundred feet of skiing available for the expert, including their new expert Jupiter Bowl area. For the rest of us there is a fine twenty-four hundred feet of vertical available.

In skiing this area the novice or low intermediate skier will find the finest runs available are at the top of the gondola by way of Claim Jumper, and the Prospector lifts. If they wish, they can ride the gondola back down, when they have skied enough. Those wanted more adventure can try Hidden Splendor, Powder Keg and Prospector and Parleys Park. On the Pay Day side there is lots of adventure on the runs Nail Driver and Widowmaker.

At the base all the services are excellent. There is a cafeteria, ski and rental shops, ski school, and many other services. There may be a long waiting line for the gondola. This is easily bypassed by the high speed chairlift, Victoria Station and the Prospector lifts.

Snow dressing is excellent with ten Thikols. The season is from November 20 to May 6 this year. The tow fee for all lifts and the gondola is fourteen dollars a day. They also have excellent night skiing. The major stockholder of this area is Mr. Badami, who also controls Alpine Meadows in the Lake Tahoe region of California.

Park City is a fine area and we enjoyed our skiing there. We left as soon as the tows closed, for we had three hundred-twenty-five miles of high mountain roads to our next destination, Steamboat Springs, Colorado. The mountains were spectacular. Our first town was Herber City, and just beyond this we went over an 8,000 foot pass. It was high mountain country, where the deep snow covered the fences. To the north we could see the lofty Unitas Mountains, containing Utahs most lofty Kings peak, 13,528 feet in elevation. We drove through Gusher, then past Dinosaur National Monument, reaching Steamboat Springs close to eleven p.m.

It had been a very beautiful day, with lots of fine skiing.

New Book Reveals Women In History

by Maureen Smith
'U' M News Service

Women's lives have often been hidden from historians, because their achievements have not usually been in the national arena. Now tens of thousands of these women, from colonial times to the present, have been discovered in a four-year nationwide survey conducted at the University of Minnesota.

Result is a new reference book, "Women's History Sources: A Guide to Archives and Manuscript Collections in the United States." Major funding for the project came from the national endowment for the humanities.

Goal of the project was to create a reference tool for scholars by identifying and locating primary sources for research. "We did create a reference tool," said Andrea Hinding, survey director and editor of the book. "What we also did was to find and create a compendium of women's history in this country. The book represents in itself a form of history."

Entries in the book are brief, with just enough information to let scholars know what is available in the 18,026 collections that are represented, but even in outline form the women's stories emerge. Included are women who are astronomers, attorneys, engineers, homemakers, legislators, nuns, outlaws, physicians, poets and stagecoach drivers.

"There are so many stories in there, . minibiographies," said associate editor Ames Sheldon Bower, "that they really get my imagination going."

Two kinds of women in American history have generally been known to scholars and the public, Hinding said. There have been prominent women — Abigail Adams, Jane Addams, Susan B. Anthony — and "Women's History Sources" reports new information about many of them. At the same time, she said, "we know about women as victims, exploited mill girls, women who died in childbirth. There are stories in the book about pain and failure."

But mostly, she said, the book records the experiences of women who fell in between fame and failure. "It tends to be an account of achievement or at least survival.

"One can deduce from the book that women led circumscribed lives, but one of the things that kept us going through 10,000 manuscript pages was our own sense of all these magnificent women who survived and achieved in spite of the obstacles."

Hinging gave an example of an accomplished women who never became well known: "Louis Armstrong had a wife, Lillian Hardin Armstrong. She, too, was a musician. Some people contend that she taught Louis Armstrong music theory. Her papers are at the jazz archive at Tulane university. She was a composer and performer, in the 1930's she led her own all-woman band.

"On one level we can feel deprived that it's only Louis Armstrong who is known to us in our collective national consciousness, that Lillian Armstrong didn't get to perform center state. That's true, and it's unfortunate. But we can still be proud of her. We found thousands and thousands of women who weren't quite center state."

Some of the women whose achievements are noted in the book made their contributions in traditional ways. "We have identified women as culture bearers," Hinding said. "Often we're amused by ladies' literary soceities or garden clubs. We've tended to adopt male values and undervalue the contributions made in cities and neighborhoods by these groups of women that we've tended to snicker at, men and women alike. But when we look at a large number of these clubs, we can see the cumulative impact."

Religious women are another group that Hinding has not thought of when the project began. Early in the project, she was giving a talk and "bemoaning the lack of women executives." A nun asked her if she had considered the contributions of religious women. "even though I was raised a Catholic, I had not considered that," she said. "There are women who have presided over colleges and hospitals and orphanages, who have built colleges and hospitals and orphanages."

Eccentric and colorful women are also included in the book. One of Hinding's favorites is Nancy Luce from Edgartown, Mass., a poet who lived by herself on a farm and kept chickens in her house as pets. Her book of poetry "Poor Little Hearts" is about her chickens. When her favorite chickens died, Luce erected gravestones for them, inscribed with poems she had written. Her papers are at the Dukes county historical society in Edgartown.

And there is "old Mother Featherlegs" who operated a handout for outlaws along the Cheyenne-Black Hill trail in Wyoming and was murdered by the outlaw "Dangerous Dick." She received her name because she wore red, ruffled pantalettes around her ankles, which fluttered in the breeze "like a feather-legged chicken" when she rode horseback. Photographs of the dedication of a Mother Featherlegs monument are at the American heritage center at the University of Wyming.

Besides uncovering hidden women, the survey team discovered unknown repositories of primary source materials. "Nobody knew how many repositories there were," Hiding said. "The best educated guess was 5,000. To be on the safe side we said 6,000. We found 11,000, and we suspect there are more."

Even scholars with no interest in women's history will benefit from the expanded list of repositories, said Clarke Chambers, professor of history at the university. "This opens up for all scholars a universe of places to go look for materials, places that they haven't thought of," Chambers said. "Scholars may have known about them locally, but here for the first time they are in a centralized source."

In addition to the obvious places — the library of congress, the national archives — the survey included county historical societies, small museums, labor collections, church collections, school collections. Most of the work was accomplished by a mail questionnaire, with archivists and curators around the country reporting on their own holdings. Twenty fieldworkers were employed for several months in 1976 and 1977 to conduct on-site surveys of repositories that were unable to take on the job themselves.

The project took longer than expected, and the two-volume book that resulted was more massive than anyone has envisioned. "Originally we thought there might be a scarcity of resources," Hinding said. "We soon knew we had an abundance of riches."

Sunflowers To Be Traded On Futures Market

Tradeing in the Minneapolis Grain exchange's new sunflower seed futures contract will open at 9:30 a.m. May 6, according to Alvin W. Donahoo, exchange executive vice president.

The Minneapolis sunflower seed futures contract offers an alternate marketing technique to assist producers, merchandisers, and processors in the pricing of the expanding sunflower crop, Donahoo said.

The announcement follows designation by the Commodity Futures Trading commission, Washington, D.C., of the Minneapolis Grain exchange as the exchange where sunflower seed futures will be traded.

The contract calls for delivery of No. 1 U.S. origin oil sunflower seeds with 40 per cent oil for November, January, March, May and July delivery. Sunflower futures will be traded in units of 100,000 pounds. Delivery points are Duluth, Minn.; Superior, Wis., and Minneapolis-St. Paul.

The ticker tape symbol for sunflower seed futures is SF. Prices will be quoted in cents per hundred pounds. Prices in a single day's trading are prohibited from advancing or declining more than 50 cents per hundredweight or $500 per contract from the previous day's close.

A limited number of temporary, nontransferable one-year trading permits will be sold for $2,000 each to nonmembers to trade sunflower seed futures Donahoo noted. Qualifications for trading permits are the same as for memberships, which are open to persons of legal age who have a reputation for fair and honest business dealings.

U.S. sunflower seed annual production has increased from about 100,000 metric tons in the early 1970's to about 500,000 metric tons in 1976. By 1979, U.S. production was 3.6 million metric tons — a 36-fold increase in sunflower seed production in 10 years.

Responding to worldwide sunflower seed and oil developments, the Minneapolis Grain exchange last year decided to propose a sunflower futures contract. One of the factors involved has been the carryover of sunflower seeds from one year to the next, instead of moving directly into marketing channels. Farmers, as well as country elevators, processors, exporters and merchandisers, need a means of reducing the risk of large losses from falling or rising prices and the price information that a viable future market offers, Donahoo added.

Insured Crop Is A Better Credit Risk

For many farmers, as for just about everyone else, the nation's tight money situation means exactly that: Money is not only expensive to borrow but it is sometimes difficult to find. Spot checks reveal that some farmers are having to settle for less credit than they need in order to keep pace with fast rising production costs.

"One way a farmer can sometimes coax additional credit from a reluctant lender is by obtaining the protection of an all-risk crop insurance policy," according to Amos Larson, area agent for USDA's federal crop insurance corporation. Larson notes that if the farmer chooses to do so, the insurance policy can even be pledged as loan collateral.

"Lenders in farming areas certainly aren't to blame for the current credit tightness," Larson adds, "but they have to react to it by favoring those borrowers who are able to offer the best security for their loans. A crop insurance policy is the best possible security because it guarantees a source of income to repay loans even if the borrower should experience a total crop loss."

He also points out that insurance indemnities save the farmer-policyholder who has lost a crop the expense of additional interest that results when a loan can't be repaid on time. "At today's record-high interest rates," the insurance agent contends, "it is far less expensive to insure borrowed money than it is to continue paying interest on it. Moreover, when a borrower pays off his debts on time, he protects his ability to borrow the money he will need in future years."

Information about all-risk crop insurance and the loan protection it provides can be obtained by writing to Amos Larson, FCIC Agent, 105 S. Division, Warren, Minnesota 56762, or call 218-745-4631. The deadline for applications in Pennington county is April 15.

Mixer Attracts 730 People On Monday Night

Attendance at the annual farmer-merchant mixer Monday evening in the American Legion club rooms totaled 730 people, just 10 short of the record 740 established last year, according to Norm Cruse, executive vice president of the Thief River Falls chamber of commerce.

The chamber's agri-business committee sponsored the mixer which has become a highlight of the committee's activity throughout the year.

A number of persons attending the mixer also visited the "Bakery Bus" prepared by the Minnesota Wheat council and parked outside the clubrooms. The 28-foot van is totally self-contained, including its own generator, and has mixing facilities and oven for baking bread with flour made from Minnesota dark northern spring wheat.

It will be sent next month to the Philippine Islands where it will be used to demonstrate the use of wheat flour in both rural and urban areas. Terry Fladeland, wheat council producer-chairman from Red Lake Falls, stated that "anytime you can effectively promote the use of a product, the reflection will come in the form of increased sales."

Wheat producers are paying for the unit with a check-off from wheat sales. No government expense nor taxpayer dollars are involved.

Adopt Procedure On School Election

Thief River Falls board of education adopted procedure for the annual school election May 20, hired a mechanic foreman-supervisor, approved the school calendar for 1980-81 and authorized the administration to offer pre-parenthood education at a meeting held Monday evening in the Lincoln high school library.

Above actions followed a 7 p.m. session at the school district service center to discuss supervisors' salary negotiations and an 8 p.m. discussion of special education at the library.

Annual school election on May 20 will have three school board positions to be filled. Terms of Larry McDowell, Robert Sorvig and Maynard Wedul expire this year. Saturday, April 5, is the first day to file for school board office and filings will close on Tuesday, April 29.

Action was taken by the board at the request of Supt. William Corliss to establish a fourth polling place in the district — the area vocational-technical institute.

As a result of that action, persons living in the boundaries of the previous St. Hilaire school district will vote at the St. Hilaire school, those in the section south and east of the Red Lake river will vote at Franklin middle school, those in the section north of the Red Lake river and east of the Thief river will vote at the AVTI; and those in the section west of the Red Lake river will vote at Lincoln. Voting hours will be from 4 to 8 p.m.

Ray Vigstol was hired as mechanic foreman-supervisor at an annual rate of $18,000 with benefits as negotiated. Vigstol will be subject to a six-month probationary period and review at the end of that period.

The pre-parenthood education course is offered in compliance with Title IX education requirements for pregnant high school girls. Participation in the program, to be taught by Yvonne Sorenson, will be voluntary and cost will be paid through the Children and Parents Learning Together program.

Rationale for the program is that one million teenagers become pregnant each year in the United States, nine out of 10 teenage mothers who give birth will keep their babies, pregnancy is the most common reason for girls to drop out of school, nearly half of pregnant teenagers receive no pre-natal care in the first trimester and death rates for babies born to mothers under 18 are nearly twice the rate for babies born to mothers aged 20 to 29.

Classes will focus on personal interactions and relationships and will provide information about birth and child development behavior. Forty hours of class time would equal one-quarter school credit. The pilot project would be subject to review at the first June board meeting.

Resignations were accepted from Carol Ihle, speech therapist and Bonita Kluver, home economics instructor at Lincoln high school, both effective at the end of the 1979-

City Looks At Voting Option For Liquor Issue

Finance committee recommendations brought before Thief River Falls city council members last evening at the regular city council meeting raised the question — again — of two major alternatives to the proposal of liquor store construction.

Alternatives to the question included: (1) Building an entirely new liquor store with storage facilities; or (2) building a new liquor store at the rear of the existing building and using the present liquor store for storage.

"I move that the city not go into a complete liquor store revision without entering into a referendum vote with the residents of Thief River Falls," alderman Bill Penning stated.

"We should give the people a chance to vote on the entire matter of the new liquor store, by placing the issue before voters in the form of a referendum, alderman Dr. Don Goodrich agreed.

In opposition to these statements, alderman Milan Borsheim stated that it would not be necessary to have the issue on a referendum ballot.

"If you have a business, you don't tear it down and start over," alderman Goodrich added, in opposition to the proposal to construct a completely new building.

"The question is — is this a decision of the people?" alderman Penning questioned. "I believe we should give the people as much information on the issue as possible so they have something to vote on."

On a roll call vote of all council members on the motion not to construct the liquor store without a favorable vote from city residents, aldermen Penning and Goodrich voted "yes" with the remainder of the council members voting "no".

In further council action, Dale Wennberg, representing the Thief River Falls Amateur Hockey association (TRFAHA), spoke to council members on the proposed ice plant for the old arena in Thief River Falls.

"A down payment has been made for the ice plant," he said. "All we need now is a building to house it (ice plant) in."

Proposed site discussed was the parking lot behind the old arena, with construction to begin June 1, if possible, he said.

"This is something we've got to have," alderman Ole Engelstad said. "I think we (council) should help out in this matter."

The introduction of a resolution by alderman Engelstad followed with a second from alderman Ambrose Wysoski to grant TRFAHA a permit to erect the building to house the ice plant and Zamboni resurfacing machine. Added to the

Bruno F. Beiswengers Renew Marriage Vows

Renewal of the marriage vows highlighted the 50th wedding anniversary celebration held on Saturday, March 22, at St. John Lutheran church for Mr. and Mrs. Bruno F. Beiswenger of this city.

Officiating at the ceremony was Rev. Barrie Henke. Attendants were Beiswenger's brother, Carl, who was best man when the couple was married here on March 20, 1930; and Sarah Robinson of Fosston, sister of Mrs. Beiswenger, who took the place of her sister and bridesmaid, Irene Sandburg, Minneapolis, who was unable to be present.

Adding to the ceremony were two selections by the St. John choir with Beiswenger singing in the men's section.

A program followed with Doug Cederberg of Federal Way, Wash., a son-in-law as master of ceremonies. He introduced the couple's daughters: Mrs. Roger (Dolores) Mickelson, Goodridge, Mrs. Ted (Shirley) Eckstein, Red Lake Falls, and Mrs. Doug (Phyllis) Cederberg. They, in turn, introduced their husbands, children and the only great-grandchild, Curt Eckstein.

The program also included a poem read by granddaughter, Beattie Mickelson; an original poem about the lives of the Beiswengers, written and read by Phyllis Cederberg, and a resume of the family's history by Doug Cederberg. As Cederberg told of the couple's wedding, the wedding dress was modeled by granddaughter Angela Michelson Frey of Des Moines, Iowa; a mock charivari was given by grandsons Cal, Rick, Randy, Steven and Chad Eckstein of Red Lake Falls. The program concluded with a duet (by Beiswenger and Mrs. Cederberg.

A reception followed with the daughters and their families hosting the event. Grandchildren Harold Mickelson, Goodridge, and Nick Frey, Des Moines, Iowa, ladled the punch as Sherryl Eckstein, Red Lake Falls, presided at the guest book. Beattie Mickelson poured the coffee together with Beiswenger's sister, Mrs. Sally Knutson of this city.

Centering the serving table was a three-tiered anniversary cake baked and decorated by Mrs. Margaret Rupprecht. Roses and gold accents highlighted the marbleized cake, iced in white, and topped with a 50th anniversary emblem. The cake was cut and served by Mrs. Arnold Hammer, who was a neighbor while the couple lived on the farm, and Mrs. Don Hermanson, of this city, who is their neighbor now.

Approximately 125 relatives and friends attended the reception. They were from Hillsboro, N.D., East Grand Forks, Red Lake Falls, Fosston, Fisher, Goodridge and the Thief River Falls community. Among them were 11 of the 18 grandchildren. In addition to those already mentioned were Tim and Tom Mickelson. Grandchildren unable to attend but sending greetings were Marideth, Matthew, Mark and Maureen Cederberg of Federal Way, Wash.; Harlan and Stuart Mickelson of Superior, Wyoming and Paula Mickelson Stylie and her husband, Harvey, of Porter.

Also unable to attend but sending greetings were Mrs. Beiswenger's sister and brother, Irene Sundburg of Minneapolis, Bill Sanders, and Beiswenger's sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Risteau of Detroit, Mich.

After their marriage, the Beiswengers lived and farmed in Smiley township until 1970, when they built and moved into their new home in this city. Since then, Beiswenger's hobby is making wooden furniture. He is 80 years old, and his wife, the former Mary Estella Sanders, is 79. She spends her leisure hours reading. They are long-time members of St. John Lutheran church where both are still active [illegible] various organizations in the church.

Lincoln Art Students Submit WCTU Posters

Lincoln high school art students will display their art work at the District Woman's Christian Temperance Union convention to be held April 12 in Bemidji.

Displaying posters will be members of Donald Lerud's 10th, 11th and 12th grade art classes. The 22 posters submitted by Lerud, portray the harmful effects of smoking, drinking and drug abuse.

The meeting of the Alice Mae Stuart Thief River Falls Woman's Christian Temperance union was held Friday afternoon at Our Saviour's Lutheran church. It began with the group joining insinging "Battle Hymn of the WCTU."

The devotional meditation, given by Mrs. Alfred Haugan, was based on the theme "Channel of Awareness." She read Isiah 40:28-31. She stated that although the Lord alone knows when the state of blessedness shall take place, Christians must prepare for the event by making their homes and lives pleasing to God. She concluded by rereading Isaiah 40:31. Several prayers by individuals followed the meditation.

Members participated in the program by giving the pledge to the U.S. flag, the Christian flag and the Temperance flag. A number of readings were given. Included were "Things Don't Just Happen, They're Planned" by Hildur Lian who also read "For God and Home and Every Land." "Protected from Alcohol," and the Radio Releases, were read by Volborg Hanson, and "Alcoholism called Epidemic, third leading killer in U.S.", a clipping from the Minneapolis Star, was read by Mrs. Alfred Hougan.

In the clipping it was noted that according to a study at the University of California-Davis Medical school, alcohol is involved in one of every three suicides and one of every two traffic deaths; and it has been found that half of all homicide victims have high blood-alcohol levels. It was also noted that the average alcoholic dies 12 years earlier than the non-alcoholic.

Following the meeting, members signed cards for Mrs. Earle Ripley and Mrs. B. Westacott.

St. Hilaire's Bridge Again Board Topic

Further discussion on the replacement of the St. Hilaire bridge damaged in a vehicle mishap took place at the meeting of the Pennington county board of commissioners last week.

A delegation consisting of county attorney David Olin, county engineer Arvid Olson and representatives of the county board and St. Hilaire citizens had been to St. Paul to meet with Gordon Fay, state aid engineer with the Minnesota department of transportation. Fay had rejected plans for the bridge replacement.

In the meeting it was reaffirmed by Fay that the bridge plan must be revised to improve the alignment of the west approach to highway 32 for safety reasons. The realignment would increase the cost of the project and revised plans would have to be submitted to the department of transportation for approval.

Final approval was given by the board on plats by Erick Rensla and Harry Oen and a resolution asking the legislature to pass a two-cent gas tax and divert a portion of the sales tax on motor vehicles into the highway fund.

Bids were received on sale of the wood garage which had housed the county motor grader at Goodridge prior to building of a new building. High bidder was Wayne Holmgren of Thief River Falls at $1,027. The building is to be moved within 30 days after load limits are removed from county roads.

The sheriff, engineer and board discussed enforcement of load limits on county roads and it was noted that the sheriff's department has portable scales and will be patrolling county roads in an effort to reduce damage due to overweight vehicles.

Hearing on the five-year road and bridge program was held in the evening to conclude the county board session.

Jerry Prickett, supervisor of buildings and grounds (right), presented Paetznick with a service appreciation plaque. After a brief return to Northrop school, he finished his last five or six years of service at Franklin. He has memories of stripping, sealing, waxing and scrubbing wood floors; maintaining tile floors at Franklin school; joining other custodians to scrub several gym floors in series; and cleaning up after and patching broken pipes. His immediate plans are to catch up on tasks undone at home and devote a lot more time to fishing and hunting.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

What is your definition of fairness in reporting of the events in Thief River Falls? Are you a fair minded reporter as far as your reporting on any given issue? Do you give each side equal coverage, that is, do you treat each issue with an open mind and with fairness?

Let's take a look at a few issues and your "Fairness in Reporting."

In your editorial of March 17 you placed the coaches on your altar of sacrifice by crucifying them for not wanting to spend their time and effort, after school hours, to organize a recognition banquet for the members of our winter athletic teams. Did you surface report your feelings on this issue or did you really investigate into why this decision was made:

Looking a little further, did you treat the school board in this same manner when they cut out the wrestling programs in both Lincoln and Franklin schools? The board's reason was "the lack of funds." How many young athletes were deprived of an opportunity by this cut? Did you come to their aid?

Did you condemn the board for cutting the computer science program out of Franklin? "The lack of money" was again their reason. After all, not many companies are using computers today, anyway. Do you think this cut hurt the students who were interested in computer science? How did you help these students?

Did you nail the board for cutting the foreign language program out of Franklin? Are there students wanting to learn another language but don't have the opportunity? Why not ask them, Mr. Lundin?

Did you rise up to help those kids who had their summer school cut last summer because some of the courses offered were not "palatable" to certain board members? "The lack of funds" was NOT the reason because the state would fund all approved programs. This same board approved all of the classes the year before. Did some of the classes receive the ax because the teachers testified against the board in the "Unfair Labor Case?" How many of our students lost an opportunity to learn because of the board's action?

Did you even report on the court case as it was in progress or wasn't it important enough? After all, Mr. Lundin, it was only a precedent setting case in the State of Minnesota. An "out of state" newspaper, the Grand Forks Herald, saw the importance of the case and sent a reporter to Thief River Falls to report to the tax payers on how their tax dollars were being spent. Thousands of our tax dollars were spent defending out school board in their Unfair Labor acts. She was here four days, Mr. Lundin. Where were you?

The school board was found guilty of not ONE but FOUR counts of Unfair Labor practices. I would like to quote from the case, page 5, item 7, in the Conclusions of Law, "That plaintiff Thief River Falls Education association has suffered irreparable harm and injury and will continue to suffer irreparable harm and injury as a result of defendant school district's unfair labor practices." Did you come to the teachers' defense then, Mr. Lundin? No, sir, you would not even write about the case until weeks after the case was over, and then very little. Why, Mr. Lundin? Is that your "Fairness"?

Did you crucify the board for all the educational programs that were cut from our school system? Programs which would take away a great deal of student learning because of the "lack of funds" only to have an audit prove that about a million dollars were hidden in the budgets. It was later reported to the public as an error made by the computer. Maybe a computer program at Franklin could help out in this area?

Well, Mr. Lundin, if this is your idea of "fairness" then so be it. But the next time you want to crucify the teachers, and should you run out of nails, why not ask God for some. I'm sure He has some used ones that were once used on His Son — after a banquet. This, Mr. Lundin, is one event not even YOU can blame on the MEA. Have a Happy Easter.

Yours truly,
Patrick L. Klemisch

Ban Weekend Boating? — No!

The issue of energy conservation is important to the well-being of this country, but in some cases, rules and regulations mandated by the Department of Energy are discriminatory and unfair to individuals and communities dependent on recreation and related industries.

In particular, the Standby Emergency Energy Conservation Plan, as provided for by the Emergency Conservation Act of 1979 would, if implemented, discriminate against the boating industry due to the fact that this plan singles out the boating industry while not limiting fuel for other recreational activities. This regulation, which in effect would prohibit weekend boating, would not save a significant amount of fuel since the recreational boating industry only uses one-half of one per cent of all petroleum used in the United States and only one per cent of the total of motor fuels.

In addition to its unfair impact on weekend boaters and fishermen, this proposal would seriously damage the marine industry and would cause a significant loss in the number of jobs to people living in communities dependent on the boating industry.

The impact to the State of Minnesota and the Seventh District would be great. Currently there are approximately 560,000 registered boats and 750 firms directly involved in the marine industry. Recreational boating in the State is a $450 million industry and a ban on weekend boating would have a severe impact on these revenues, jobs and the entire Minnesota tourism industry.

The energy situation we are currently facing is a national problem and, in my opinion, all individuals and businesses are willing to accept an equal burden during this energy emergency. This proposed regulation, however, singles out a particular industry to bear the burden and this is why I am cosponsoring a resolution (H. Con. Res. 290) which states that the Department of Energy should not issue regulations to unduly burden recreational boaters and the boating industry. I have also submitted written testimony to the Department of Energy expressing my deep concern and strong opposition to this proposed regulation and, furthermore, I have written along with other members of the Minnesota Congressional Delegation, to Energy Secretary Charles Duncan stating my reservations and opposition to this method of energy conservation.

Developing a standby conservation program is an idea I support, but the Department of Energy's proposal to ban weekend boating is not what Congress wanted and is unacceptable. If we are to have mandatory conservation measures, should they be found necessary, they must be fair to everyone and not penalize solely one segment of our society.

Congratulations to Gene and Gretchen Beito for purchasing the Rudy Leverson home. This was originally the Bethany hospital — the first hospital in Thief River Falls. Spring is coming fast and we are looking for more stories of the past for our book. Frank Heinze has a very interesting one about his childhood on a farm 15 miles north of Thief River.

As a four-year-old, Frank remembers following his mother and helping plant the garden. At the age of eight, he knew much about gardening and preparing vegetables for selling in town. This would take most of the day and by midnight they would have the wagon loaded and the horses ready and leave for 'town, hoping to get there by six o'clock.

There were no roads, only a trail across the country and many times the wagon would get stuck in the mud. Upon their arrival they would go to the hotels first. If there were any vegetables left, they would sell them going from door to door. Usually they would start for home about eight o'clock and get home by midnight. The Heinze family members were excellent gardeners. They later moved to a place just south of Thief River Falls. The rest of the Heinze story will be in our second book.

Again we have lost a part of our heritage — Justus Larson. Every time one of our citizens dies some of our past dies with them. They were all a part of our lives which can never be re-created. When they are gone we are at the mercy of our memories.

We will remember Justus for his love for music and as a good and kind friend to everyone. There was enjoyment in going into his place of business and always being greeted with that friendly smile. Many people are happier for having known Justus Larson. Our living memories live on.

Tuesday, April 15, at 8 p.m. the monthly meeting of the historical society will be held in the city auditorium meeting room. Mr. and Mrs. Harstad of Newfolden will show slides of Norway. The public is invited.

USE OF THE driver education simulator was one of the workshops offered to driver education instructors during the Northwest Educational cooperative service unit's common inservice day at Lincoln high school Monday. During instruction, each student views and listens to a film on a large screen in front of him while he reacts to various situations in his own "car." The simulator will be a supplement to the six hours of driver education behind the wheel — the maximum hours required by the state. Eight hours on the simulator will be equivalent to two behind the wheel, resulting in four actual hours behind the wheel and two with the simulator, according to Bob Michalicek, driver education instructor. Thirty-eight area schools will be using the simulator. "It is a good learning service," Michalicek said. "We can show drivers so many situations that they wouldn't encounter behind the wheel with an instructor."

Workshop On Careers At Oklee Monday

Of special interest will be the computer terminal which is part of the Minnesota occupational information system. Loing will help workshop participants use the system to find out such things as what careers match their interests, information concerning a specific career or further education and the employment outlook for particular careers.

Specific information on interviewing skills and other tips on how to get a job will be available. Workshop is open to the public. For further questions, call Home Start at 796-5144.

The Times — A Great Gift!

Music Building At University Is Approved

A new $12 million music building on the University of Minnesota west bank campus has now been approved by money committees in both houses of the legislature.

The full House appropriations committee voted for the $12 million building March 20, overriding a previous decision by its education division not to fund the project. The Senate finance subcommittee on education had recommended the $12 million, and the bill was passed March 17 by the full committee.

The music building was the university's number two priority construction request. The present music program is spread among 11 buildings on the Minneapolis campus.

The music building request was not submitted until February, and that was one reason it was originally turned down, said Mike Sieben, DFL-Newport, who chairs the education division. The governor had made no recommendation on the music request.

Lobbying by music program administrators also hurt the request, Sieben said. "Their demands for additional money to build a concert hall, library and museum indicated the $12 million request would not meet the music school's needs."

"The lobbying effort showed their political innocence," said Phyllis Kahn, DFL-Minneapolis, "and should not penalize the real needs of the music program."

The vote was 19-17 in favor of the music building.

The amendment to include the music building in the bonding bill was introduced by Bill Dean, IR-Minneapolis, who said he felt some legislators dropped the music building to provide money to the proposed Humbert Humphrey institute of public affairs building.

Dean's amendment also called for $400,000 in planning money to build the Humphrey institute on the west bank campus. It called for the requested $3.8 million for a business administration addition, and stipulated that the university would plan common use of space for its west bank Humphrey institute, business administration and law school programs.

That part of the Dean amendment failed on a 19-17 vote. It means that the House building bill still contains a $13.2 million allocation to build a combined Humphrey institute and business administration addition on the west bank.

The university had requested $11 million to build the Humphrey institute near Memorial stadium on the east bank campus, and $3.8 million to build a business administration addition next to the business tower on the west bank campus. The Humphrey institute request did not have a priority ranking, and university officials urged legislators to consider it a special request, apart from the university building request.

Sieben originated the plan to combine the institute and business addition requests. "I don't think there will be effective coordination of space if the buildings are separated," he said Thursday. He said his plan was cheaper. "The amendment calls for $3.8 million for business administration this year and $11 million in construction money for the Humphrey institute next year. For what purpose? Let's build now and build them together to share space and save a little money."

The full Senate finance committee Monday approved $11 million for the Humphrey institute near Memorial stadium and $5 million for the business administration addition. Roger Moe, DFL-Ada, chairman of the finance committee education subcommittee, said he strongly favors a separate Humphrey institute building on the east bank campus.

A House-Senate conference committee will probably meet late next week to consider differences in the building bills. Another major difference in the bills is $3.3 million approved by the Senate for remodeling the public health facilities on the Minneapolis campus, a request that so far is missing from the House bill.

Lake Bronson Site Yields Information On Indian Travel

Prehistoric Indians in northeastern Minnesota and southern Canada may have been more mobile in pre-horse days than most European settlers believed. A recent radiocarbon dating analysis on samples of charcoal taken from an archeological site at Lake Bronson may add more weight to that claim, says Dr. Mike Michlovic, an assistant professor of anthropology at Moorhead state university.

The Lake Bronson site, near the south branch of Two Rivers in Kittson county, was first excavated when Indian burial mounds were found there in 1936. But in 1976 a planned realignment of highway 10 was routed right through an adjacent part of the ancient camp site. Michlovic and a crew of students from Moorhead state received a grant from the Minnesota historical society to recover whatever they could from the site before the road went through.

When Michlovic excavated the area, he found pieces of pottery usually associated with a prehistoric Indian culture called Laurel, a woodland people that hunted the forest and lake regions of south-central Canada and northeastern Minnesota over 2,000 years ago.

Michlovic didn't expect to find Laurel pottery at the Lake Bronson site, an ancient Indian campground situated at the edge of the state's northwestern prairie. It just wasn't considered a likely hunting zone for the forest Indians who lived hundreds of miles to the east.

But nearby the Laurel pottery shards, Michlovic also found pieces of bison bone, an indication that these Indians may have made forays outside the forests to hunt the bison herds that migrated to Lake Bronson each winter.

Three years ago, right after finishing the excavation, Michlovic sent a sample of charcoal from one of the prehistoric fire pits at Lake Bronson to a New Jersey laboratory for a radiocarbon dating analysis. It was dated at 205 A.D., smack in the middle of the Laurel period from 200 B.C. to 500 A.D.

Last year, during construction of the highway, Scott Anfinson, the Minnesota historical society's county and municipal highway archeologist, found more charcoal samples from the Lake Bronson fire pits. A radiocarbon dating on that charcoal came back from the laboratory last month marked 525 A.D.

The two different radiocarbon dates, Michlovic said, seem to indicate that the Laurel people were hunting bison on the Lake Bronson prairie for several hundred years as a regular, routinized part of their hunting pattern.

If that's true, Michlovic said, then the forest people exploited their environment over a wider range than was once believed, from the forest regions in Canada and the Minnesota range to the prairie's edges at Lake Bronson. This all happened centuries before European settlers brought horses to the Americas.

Of course, Michlovic said, the evidence isn't conclusive. Although Laurel pottery at the site was located near some bison bones, it doesn't necessarily mean that Laurel Indians used this area, or the bones. Other cultures could have brought the Laurel pottery into Lake Bronson or adapted the pottery markings from the Laurel people. "And we're not certain that the charcoal we found is associated with the Laurel pottery. It could have been associated with other pottery remains found at Lake Bronson."

It's impossible to create a whole picture of what happened back then when we only have a few pieces of the puzzle, Michlovic said. "It's ongoing work and we have to accept that no archeological site is going to yield a complete picture. All we can do is keep putting pieces together."

10-Ton Limit On Highway 2 To Be Extended

Ten-ton routing on highway 2 across northern Minnesota (west state line to the port of Duluth-Superior) will continue past normal spring time postings. Continued observations of the roadway will determine just how long this extension is possible before lowering to nine-ton limit becomes necessary.

Length of the extension is very dependent on the weather conditions, moisture content of the soils and the roadway itself holding together. All other routes to be restricted will be posted as of today (Monday) when signs will be in place.

Minnesota department of transportation stated that this extension is a direct result of the importance of this transportation link to the economy of Minnesota and its continuing concern for the need to move grain in a safe, efficient and timely manner. Economic hardships associated with reduced grain movements in 1979, backup of grain throughout the area and the early opening of the Port of Duluth were also important considerations.

Mn-DOT will continue its state maintenance crews on the roadway using the limited funds that are available for patching each spring. Persons needing information on roadway restrictions should call the Mn-DOT maintenance offices at Bemidji (218-755-2942) or Crookston (218-281-3503).

NEWS OF ENERGY

There's good news from some energy experts. We may be better able to pull the plug on OPEC if we plug in the electric car.

Battery-driven cars can help put us on the road to easing the energy crisis.

For decades, lead-acid batteries have been used to start cars and make engines work more efficiently.

Now, the lead-acid battery offers a way out of the gas line via economical, clean, quiet, electric autos. With estimated operating costs under four cents a mile for a limited-range electric subcompact, the potential demand for electrics should stimulate U.S. automakers to get such vehicles into production faster, point out the experts at the St. Joe Lead Company.

Lead battery-powered cars can cut fuel waste, make efficient use of our off-peak generating resources, make us less dependent on foreign oil, lower our unfavorable balance of payments, help cut inflation and protect our environment.

Gaven Handles CF Bike-A-Thon At St. Hilaire

James Gaven has volunteered to coordinate local volunteers in organizing a bike-a-thon to be held in St. Hilaire in May, according to Ron Swain, president of the Minnesota chapter of the cystic fibrosis foundation.

Cystic fibrosis (CF), the most serious lung-damaging disease, is incurable. One in every 1,600 American children inherits this disease when they receive a gene for CF from each of their parents. It is estimated that 10 million Americans are symptomless and unknowing carriers of the gene which can cause CF in their child.

Through research funded by the cystic fibrosis foundation, a test to identify carriers is being sought and scientists are pursuing a cure or control for cystic fibrosis.

The bike-a-thon will help support these research programs and medical care to lengthen the lives of lung-damaged children through over 120 cystic fibrosis centers in the United States.

Citizens of the St. Hilaire area wishing to volunteer to help with the bike-a-thon can call the Minnesota chapter of the cystic fibrosis foundation at (612) 871-0462.

STEER Plans Mission Meet At Newfolden

Rev. LaRue Goetz

Rev. Bernard Holritz

Rev. LaRue Goetz, executive director of STEER, Inc., and Rev. Bernard Holritz, executive director of Pacific Boradcasting association, Wheaton, Ill. will be at the Evangelical Free church in Newfolden on Wednesday, April 2, at 7:30 p.m.

STEER, Inc. is a non-profit, evangelical, interdenominational missionary enterprise with its office headquarters at Bismarck, N.D., that "steers money to missions" around the world through the means of livestock and a crop sharing program called "God's Acre" plan. This organization has channeled almost a million dollars to foreign missions in the last 20 years.

Many farmers across the Midwest and Great Plains area are beginning to use this method of giving to missions, because STEER, Inc. furnishes the capital to purchase livestock and the farmer provides the feed and care. When the animals are sold, the profit goes to missions.

Each farm family that signs up in the STEER plan has the option of designating its stewardship to one of STEER's 82 member mission societies.

The "God's Acre" plan works in the same was as the livestock program. In the last six months over $20,000 has been sent to missions from the "God's Acre" plan alone.

A free will offering will be received at Newfolden for STEER, Inc.'s world-wide mission ministry. Everyone is welcome.

Child Care Agencies Plan Open Houses

Open house schedule is as follows: Thief River Falls preschool program, 8:30 to 11 a.m. Wednesday, April 9; Parents and Children Learning Together program at Mark Twain school, 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. April 9; Discovery Place, 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and 2:30 to 5 p.m. Tuesday, April 8; Falls day activity center, by appointment; and Thief River Falls nursery school, 9 to 11 a.m. Friday, April 11.

Some 17,000 smells have been classified. Among them is the most expensive ingredient for perfume: pure French middle note jasmine, which sells for $197 an ounce.

Governor Asks Legislators To Hold The Line

"Management of the state budget is similar to running a household budget. Just as you cannot spend more than you earn, the state should not plan to spend more than it receives in state revenues," states Gov. Al Quie.

"This is why I have asked the state legislature to hold the line in 1980 expenditures. That means not spending more than the $84.7 million that is projected to be in our state treasury at the end of the current biennium.

"In a March 12 news conference I said I would veto any spending bills that exceeded the department of finance's projections," the governor reminded.

"I also stated that I will continue to support setting aside some of this surplus money as a reserve. With a state budget of about $7.8 billion only a slight downturn in the economy could mean a decline in state revenues and would result in a deficit if we have no reserve. That would mean budget and spending cuts for such programs as school aids and health care.

"I have outlined the way that I would like to spend some of this anticipated surplus. The legislature has also set out some spending priorities. While I am willing to work with the legislature to work out a compromise on how these funds can best be used, it is essential that no more than the projected $84.7 million be spent. Any spending over that amount would be irresponsible and would threaten a deficit which is prohibited under the Constitution," Gov. Quie said.

Current economic trends also indicate that the state should not spend beyond those projections with the hope of larger than anticipated state revenues.

The January 1980 projections by the department of finance did not increase in February. In previous years these figures tended to increase slightly month by month. Because the projections turned down slightly, there appears to be little reason to believe that we will have more money at the end of the biennium than the department now expects, Quie added.

"We must also take into consideration. President Carter's new anti-inflation proposal. It appears very likely that the state may not receive its $35 million in revenue sharing money. Some legislators had counted on these funds in making their budgeting proposals, but because that money may not materialize I would hope they would reconsider their plans.

"It is imperative that our state spending be responsible. I believe I must stand firm on a matter so important to our state as maintaining a solid financial base," he concluded.

Scripture Reading for Today: Proverbs 23:29-35

PROTECTED FROM ALCOHOL

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. Proverbs 20:1

COUNTLESS lives have been ruined by the damaging effects of alcohol. Yet the Bible contains as many as 70 warnings about the evils of strong drink. If we heed these "caution lights," we can be kept from the sin of drunkenness. The following story illustrates how God's Word helped one young man.

A Christian teenager was urged by his mother to memorize certain texts from the book of Proverbs. Her request had been prompted by the fact that there were alcoholics in her own family. One day while on a vacation cruise, this young fellow was approached by two men who were drinking hard liquor. Even though he was still under-age, they said, "Come on, join us." But he rejected their invitation. Then he quoted Proverbs 20:1, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." When they continued to insist that a glass or two wouldn't hurt him, he replied, "But Proverbs 23:32 says, 'At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.' " "Oh, don't be a sissy. Have a little," they persisted. But he steadfastly replied, "Proverbs 1:10 says, 'My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.' " Finally his tempters decided he was "too religious," and they left him alone. Because that young believer knew these admonitions from the Bible, he was protected from the snare of alcohol and was wise enough to avoid the seductive "wiles of the devil."

Another verse the teenager had memorized but didn't quote is an appropriate directive for our lives as Christians: "Be not among winebibbers"! (Prov. 23:20) —H.G.B.

Beware of the enticing glass
That lures you early to the tomb,
For alcohol with subtle chains
Can drag your soul to sin's sad doom. —G.W.

THOT: Only weak characters lean on strong drink. —Bosch

Dr. Youngquist Is Honored By Beet Growers

Dr. Bernard E. Youngquist, superintendent, Northwest experiment station, Crookston, was given the distinguished service award at the recent sugarbeet growers institute held at Crookston. This award was presented by the sugarbeet institute planning committee on behalf of sugarbeet growers in Minnesota and North Dakota.

Allen Cattanach, chairman of the committee, stated that the 19 members of the planning group singled out Dr. Youngquist as one of the seminar originators and outstanding contributors. Cattanach said that Youngquist had been an active member of the committee since it was originated and that the group wanted to honor Youngquist's long-time efforts on behalf of the sugarbeet industry. It was noted that this is not an annual award but one granted only on special merits as determined by association committees.

Youngquist, a native of Finlayson, Minnesota, earned several degrees in agriculture and his Ph. D. degree at the University of Minnesota. He became superintendent of the Northwest experiment station and former school of agriculture on July 1, 1956.

Dr. Richard J. Sauer, 40, the new director of University of Minnesota agricultural experiment stations, visited briefly at the research station and attended the sugarbeet institute. He assumed the position of director this month, is a native of Walker and recently was head of the department of entomology at Kansas state university, Manhattan.

Dr. Asuer graduated from St. John's university in Minnesota with a B.S. in biology; earned an M.S. in zoology at the University of Michigan; and a Ph.D. from North Dakota state university in entomology. In 1975 and 1976 he was acting associate director of the Michigan agricultural experiment station.

Sauer attended a portion of the sugarbeet institute seminar and visited with farmers and researchers in the northwest area. "One of my first concerns is to listen to people out in the state and to determine what their needs are," Sauer said.

Series E Bonds Continue To Draw Interest

Many people have the mistaken impression, that because Series E savings bonds have been withdrawn from sale the bonds they own are no longer earning interest. As a result, cashing of Series E. bonds has been running much higher than usual, often I suspect to the disadvantage of the owner, states Clifford C. Sommer, Minnesota savings bond chairman.

While Series E bonds have been replaced by the comparable U.S. energy savings bonds, Series EE, all of the existing E bonds are earning interest at this time, Sommer said.

The treasury announced that only those Series E bonds issued between May of 1941 and April of 1952 will discontinue earning interest on the 40th anniversary of purchase. This means that an E bond purchased in May of 1941 will earn interest until May of 1981. A bond purchased on April of 1952 will earn interest until April of 1992. The others will fall somewhere in between these dates and bonds purchased after April of 1952 are unaffected by this announcement. They continue earning interest beyond these dates.

E bonds held five years of longer are now earning 6½ per cent compounded semi-annually and if held for an additional 11 years beyond January 1 of 1980, will earn seven per cent for the 11-year period. The state income tax exemption and the federal income tax deferral enhance the yield to all buyers.

Owners of those early E bonds reaching their final maturity after May of 1981, should know there is an exchange privilege for the Series HH bonds (a current income bond) which affords an additional 10-year deferment of federal tax liability on accumulated E bond interest.

The indiscriminate cashing of E bonds can result in lost interest and unnecessary tax liability. Questions concerning E bonds and their prudent administration can be answered by local full service bankers and savings and loan associations, Sommer said.

Dinner Honors Author During Library Week

Plans for the second annual book and author dinner in honor of National Library week have been announced by the librarians of Thief River Falls.

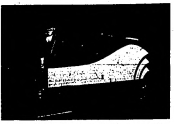
National Library week April 13-19 is sponsored by the American Library association and serves to promote the use and support of all types of libraries and to make the publis aware of the many services available at their local library.

This year's celebration will be a progressive "Supper in the Stacks" beginning at 6 p.m. on April 19, at the Northland community college library. A roast beef buffet dinner will be served in the library. Following the dinner the featured author will address the group.

This year's guest is Ted Kooser from Lincoln, Neb. Kooser is a contemporary poet and the author of 11 books. His most recent book "Sure Signs" was just published by the University of Pittsburg Press. In addition, Kooser owns and operates "Windflower Press"... an active small publishing firm.

Dessert will be served at the public library and will be followed by a poetry reading given by Kooser as part of the series, "Words, Well Wrapped."

Tickets for "Supper in the Stacks" are now on sale. They are $7.50 each and can be purchased from Judy Rosetta, Northland community college; Julie Anne Chase or Wayne Alfveby, Northwest regional library, Thief River Falls. Requests can be made in person or through the mail. Attendance will be limited to 50 people.



PLAINS BOOKBUS will be visiting Thief River Falls Friday following the scheduled poetry reading workshop set at 8 p.m. at the Northwest regional library. Bookbus will also be open to the public March 29 from 9 to 10 a.m. and again from noon to 4 p.m. Items on the bookbus will be available for examination and purchase. Bookbus travels throughout the Midwest, visiting communities and displaying over 200 books and magazine titles published by non-commercial presses.

This event is co-sponsored by the librarians of Thief River Falls with institutional assistance from the Northwest regional library and Northland community college and support from the Hartz foundation. Because of work to rule, librarians employed by District 564 regretfully withdrew from active participation in the event.

Farmers Find Leasing Fits Farm Operation

Record interest rates are changing the way farmers are buying tractors and combines. Many now prefer to lease or shell out straight cash rather than pay 14 per cent to 17 per cent interest or higher.

As a result, farm machinery manufacturers are seeing an upswing in their leasing business. "Our leasing volume has almost tripled over this time last year," says E. W. Muehlhausen, vice-president of marketing for one tractor manufacturer.

Farmers with high incomes find their greatest advantage in leasing, explains Richard Duvick, extension economist at Ohio state university. "Leasing offers particularly significant tax advantages to those farmers in the 40 per cent to 50 per cent tax brackets," Dr. Duvick says. "But you don't necessarily have to be in those higher tax brackets to benefit from the tax advantages of leasing, depending on the terms of the lease."

Even through the annual payment for the lease might be greater than an annual loan payment for the same equipment, a lease maker good business sense for these farmers. This is because the entire lease payment can be deducted from taxable income, while only the interest expense can be deducted for a loan.

And as the cost of borrowing increases, leasing looks even more attractive to these farmers, observes Dean Jewell, general manager of a Michigan equipment company. "The fellows who took the lease two years ago are sure smiling today. They've got seven-year leases with payments figured at 11½ per cent and that looks pretty nice to them," he said.

Muehlhausen summarizes advantages to leasing as follows:

+ Alternative source of funds — When money is tight, leasing allows a farmer to acquire equipment without borrowing. This leaves his other credit lines open.

+ Tax savings — All lease payments can be deducted from taxable income. Some leases qualify for investment tax credit, as well.

+ Better cash management — Payments are fixed for the life of the lease, which allows for better cash flow projections. Some loans have fluctuating interest rates, on the other hand, so payments increase with the interest rates.

+ Ability to purchase machine at lease's end — With most leases, when the lease concludes, a farmer has the option to buy the equipment. Most farmers do.

And because of inflation, leasing offers a considerable advantage over purchasing with cash, Muehlhausen says. "Because leases are spread out over a number of years, just like a loan, a farmer pays for the use of today's modern equipment with tomorrow's inflated dollars," he says.

Sabo Will Sign With Wisconsin

Scott Sabo of Thief River Falls has announced plans to attend the University of Wisconsin next year where an athletic scholarship will allow the former Prowler two-sport star to compete in both hockey and baseball for the Badgers.

Sabo, a 1979 Lincoln high school graduate, passed up college competition this year to play with the Warroad Lakers senior amateur hockey team. A banner season that saw him start slowly but finish with a flurry to be the Lakers' third leading scorer, attracted interest from several WCHA schools, most noteably Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan Tech.

Wisconsin, in dire need of center icemen after struggling through a ninth place finish in the WCHA this winter, made four scouting trips to watch Sabo play for the Lakers and are convinced he can be of immediate help.

Despite the disastrous finish, the Badgers still led the nation in college hockey attendance this season, averaging nearly 9,000 fans per game.

Sabo, a strike-out whizz last spring and summer with the Lincoln high school and Thief River Falls American Legion baseball teams, will also have the opportunity to land a spot as a pitcher on the Wisconsin baseball team that finished second in the Big Ten a year ago.

Scott will sign a national letter of intent with Wisconsin April 9 — the first day the signings are allowed by the NCAA.

Spring Sports Start Soon

Lincoln high school 1980 spring sports schedule starts Thurs., April 3, when Thief River Falls will play Crookston in a 4:30 p.m. tennis meet in the Grand Forks Tennis Center. Home opener for the strong Thief River Falls squad is slated Mon., April 14, against Bemidji.

Track season starts for the Prowlers Tues., April 8, with the Northwest Athletic Conference indoor meet at the Crookston Winter Shows building. The Prowlers' annual Quentin Jones invitational is scheduled to be held Thurs., May 1.

Girls track team is tentatively scheduled to open Mon., April 14, at Crookston, but an earlier opener may develop. The Thief River Falls invitational is set for Tues., May 6.

Lincoln baseball opener is planned Thurs., April 17, at Red Lake Falls, with the Prowlers' home opener set the following day against Bagley.

A strong Lincoln boys golf team will have to wait until Tues., April 22, to open its season at Crookston. The Thief River Falls invitational is scheduled Mon., May 19.

Girls golf schedule hasn't been set yet.

Miscellaneous

+A petition is reportedly being circulated expressing a considerable degree of "dissatisfaction" in the quality of work Bryan Grand and Lyman Brink are doing as Bemidji high school hockey coaches, according to the Bemidji Pioneer. The petition, attacked by a lengthy letter-to-the-editor by Dave Howe in the Pioneer, cited the shortcomings of Grand and Brink, evidenced by their inability to produce winning teams. The petition apparently says nothing about the Lumberjacks' schedule, always the toughest faced by any Section 8 school.

+Looking ahead to the 1980-81 season, Detroit Lakes basketball coach John Erickson said he is "pretty excited" about the prospects of the Lakers who will be visiting the Lincoln high school gym next winter. "We're going to be big and I would say that we will be a pretty good bunch for the next couple of seasons," said Erickson who will have the services of 6-5 Dave Remus, 6-5 Mike Hutchinson, 6-4 Nyle Anderson, 6-3 Tony Matter, 6-3 Todd Jorgenson and 6-2 Jeff Folkert.

+Gary Mullranin, who said earlier that the 1979-80 season would be his last as Bemidji high school swimming coach, officially resigned from that position last week. Mullranin, who said he was stepping down to devote more time to his family and to his teaching assignment, coached the Lumberjacks for five years, posting a 39-12 dual meet won-lost record over that time, including a perfect 10-0 season this winter.

Prowlers Rated No. 1 In Class AA Tennis

Thief River Falls will begin its 1980 high school tennis season next week as the No. 1 rated team in the state, according to a preseason state tennis coaches association newsletter.

The ratings, published in February, are based upon returning personnel. And the coaches throughout the state apparently know the Prowlers' line-up will be virtually unchanged from a 1979 Section 8 championship season.

Thief River Falls' personnel is indeed impressive, headed by Bill Jury, rated No. 2 in the individual state ratings, and Mitch Rustad, rated No. 7. Also on hand from a year ago are Tom Bjorkman, Bill Holmes, Mark Collins and Mark Lundin, the only junior in the otherwise all-senior group of veterans.

"I'm not so sure that the rankings are a true indication of where the power is right now," admitted Thief River Falls coach Whitey Olson, "but we're happy to receive the recognition. The kids are looking forward to the opportunity to prove themselves. They believe they have a real opportunity to be a state champion."

Only person missing from last year's list of regulars is Bill Michalek, now a member of the University of North Dakota tennis team.

And Michalek's loss was quickly filled with the addition of Paul Koppang, a talented junior who attended school here through the sixth grade before moving to Grand Forks, N.D. where he played No. 1 singles for Red River high school as a seventh, eighth and ninth grader. He moved to San Diego, Calif. area where he also played No. 1 singles as a high school sophomore before finally arriving back in Thief River Falls.

"He (Koppang) is an excellent tennis player," acknowledged Olson. "We're happy to have him."

Twenty-five players have reported to Olson and Terry Belch, a work-study aid serving as an assistant coach.

"It's fun watching them in practice," notes Olson. "I'm impressed. We're just fortunate to have the players we have at this time; We're at the top of the cycle right now."

Top 15 ranked Class AA high school tennis teams feature 1. Thief River Falls; 2. Burnsville; 3. Edina West; 4. Virginia; 5. Henry Sibley; 6. Rochester Mayo; 7. Irondale; 8. Minnetonka; 9. St. Cloud Apollo; 10. Edina East; 11. Anoka; 12. Minneapolis Southwest; 13. Austin; 14. St. Paul Highland Park; 15. Park Center.

Edina East is the defending Class AA state champion. The Hornets beat Virginia 5-0 in last year's state championship match. The Blue Devils edged Thief River Falls 3-2 in a first round state meet encounter.

Blake, the defending state Class A champion, and Blue Earth, last year's third place state finisher, are ranked 1-2 in the Class A rankings.

Chris Coombs of Edina West is the No. 1 ranked singles player ahead of Jury, already winner of two straight regional or sectional titles.

Thief River Falls will play Crookston Thurs., April 3, at 4:30 p.m. in the Grand Forks Tennis Court to open the 1980 season. Thief River Falls' home opener is scheduled Mon., April 14, against Bemidji.

Home Schedule

Mon., April 14 — Bemidji, 3:15 p.m.; Mon., April 28 — Crookston, 3:15 p.m.; Tues., April 29 — Detroit Lakes, Roseau, 2 p.m.; Thurs., May 8 — East Grand Forks, Mahnomen, 2 p.m.

Road Schedule

Thurs., April 3 — vs. Crookston at Grand Forks Tennis Center, 4:30 p.m.; Thurs., April 10 — vs. East Grand Forks, Moorhead at EGF, 2 p.m.; Sat., April 12 — at Brainerd quadrangular, 10 a.m.; Tues., April 15 — vs. Little Falls, Monticello at Little Falls, 2:30 p.m.; Tues., April 22 — vs. Moorhead, Fergus Falls at Moorhead, 2 p.m.; Fri., April 25 — at Stillwater tournament, 9 a.m.; Sat., April 26 — at Hibbing tournament, 10 a.m.; Thurs., May 1 — NWAC meet at Fergus Falls, 9 a.m.; Sat., May 3 — at St. Cloud tournament, 10 a.m.; Mon., May 5 — at Bemidji, 3:30 p.m.

Completing his fifth year as Lincoln high school head basketball coach with a best-ever 13-6 record, Glen Peters admitted this week that the Prowlers' strong showing during the 1979-80 season, which included a share of the Northwest Athletic Conference title, was a bit of a surprise.

"Actually, I think it (the season) went a lot better than I thought it would," noted Peters who began the year with three returning starters, but minus two top performers from a 1978-79 Region 8AA Sub Region 4 championship team — all-state guard Steve Enderlein and all-conference forward Jeff Oseid, the team's most valuable player.

"It was a good season for us," Peters said. "We jelled into a pretty good outfit. We were a well-balanced ball club; we were a good shooting team; and defensively we were a lot better ball club this year than we have been in the past."

The balance that Peters mentioned was certainly there. The Prowlers played basically with a six-man line-up: seniors Mark Schmitke, Greg Miller, Jim Nyland, Todd Young, Kyle Hams and Gregg Peterson, and they all contributed. But Hams was the attention-getter. The 5-9 guard averaged 16.8 points and 7.4 assists per game to earn a spot on the WCCO all-state team of the year.

"Kyle Hams did an exceptionally good job for us," acknowledged Peters. "And he was an unselfish ball player. He could have scored a lot more points, but he passed off and set up his teammates. That was one of the reasons for our success this year, too."

Nobody else managed to produce a double figure scoring average for the Prowlers, but several were close as Miller scored at a 9.7 clip; Young 9.6, and Nyland 9.4. Schmitke averaged 7.1 points per game and Peterson had a 3.9 figure.

While Hams looms as the team's most valuable player, Miller, said Peters, was the most improved. The 6-2 center-forward led the team with a .59 per cent shooting figure from the field, hitting 70 of 119 shots. He also pulled down 123 rebounds, second only to the 135 grabbed by Young, who averaged 7.5 rebounds per game. Nyland joined Young and Miller on the boards with 118 rebounds.

"Greg Miller was our most improved ball player," said Peters. "He really came through for us. Mark Schmitke, Jim Nyland, Todd Young and Greg Peterson all played strong ball for us, too."

Schmitke was the team's top free throw shooter, hitting 38 of 48 attempts for 79 per cent. Hams was second in both shooting categories — and the busiest — as he made 134 of 267 field goal attempts for a 50 per cent mark and sank 52 of 71 free throws for 73 per cent. He also came up with a team-high 36 steals. Handling the ball most of the time, Hams also led the team with 125 turnovers. Schmitke was second in the assist department with 45. Schmitke and Nyland shared second place in the steals category with 16 apiece; and Nyland was second in the turnover charts with 60.

A look at the team statistics shows why the Prowlers were successful this past season. They out-did the opposition in nearly every category. The Prowlers, as a team, shot 47 per cent from the field for the year, with the opposition shooting 39 per cent; the Prowlers shot 64 per cent from the free throw line, with the opposition shooting 57 per cent; the Prowlers averaged 33 rebounds per game, with the opposition averaging 26; the Prowlers averaged 19.4 turnovers per game, with the opposition averaging 20.3; and the Prowlers averaged 58.2 points per game, with the opposition averaging 54.2.

Thief River Falls wins this winter came over Roseau 67-49 and 55-53 in double overtime, Grafton 57-56, Kennedy 52-41, Climax 68-47, Bagley 68-59, Fergus Falls 58-57 in triple overtime, East Grand Forks 65-55 and 59-45, Bemidji 56-45, Warren 46-45, Park Rapids 64-56 and Detroit Lakes 62-49. Regular season losses came at the hands of Crookston 62-55 and 55-49, Bemidji 83-71, Mahnomen 53-49 and International Falls 62-52.

The Prowlers won seven straight season-ending games to finish the regular season 12-6, but the third loss of the year to Crookston, 57-48, in the opening round of the new North Half Region 8AA tournament at Moorhead State University ended the season and produced the Prowlers' biggest disappointment.

"We had a good season," repeated Peters. "The only disappointment during the entire year was that we did not match up well against Crookston. I thought we had as good as personnel as they did, but we just couldn't beat them on the court."

Graduation will wipe out the team, forcing the Prowlers to start from scratch in 1980-81. "When you lose seven seniors you're definitely facing a rebuilding year," admitted Peters. "It's going to be a challenge."

The Lincoln junior varsity, coached by Vern Treat, finished the 1979-80 season with a 10-8 record while the Lincoln sophomores, coached by Bruce Williams, finished 4-5 and the Lincoln freshmen, coached by Myron Peterson, struggled through a 1-16 season.

TRF YOUTH HOCKEY

"In Thief River Falls we like to say the hockey season is never over; we just take a short break in the spring and fall," writes John Michael Anderson, who supplied information for the Thief River Falls youth hockey column throughout the 1979-80 season. "That first break is coming, but it isn't here yet. Four TRFAHA teams played in tournaments this weekend, then it's banquet time; hockey camps; and finally the fall break."

Thief River Falls Bantam A team, coached by Curt Geatz and Rory Anderson, played in the sixth annual International Invitational World Bantam Tournament in International Falls over the weekend. Thief River Falls lost its opener to Kenora, Ont. 5-2, with Jerry Hallamek and Tim Bottem scoring for the losers.

Playing in the consolation round, Thief River Falls beat Denver, Colo. 7-4 as Jeff Matson and Hallamek scored two goals apiece and Tim Bergland, Jim Geatz and Mitch Semanko all scored once.

Thief River Falls beat Fargo South 3-2 double overtime in the consolation semifinals, with Jeff Storhaug scoring the game-winner. But Fort Francis, Ont. defeated Thief River Falls 5-3 in the consolation championship game.

Bantam B team closed out its 1979-80 season with a championship performance in the Fergus Falls invitational tournament, beating St. Paul Highland Heights 6-4, knocking off Fergus Falls 8-2 and out-scoring East Grand Forks 8-6 in the championship game. Dave Beverly and Bill Ramsey coached the Bantam B team this winter.

Pee-Wee A team took home consolation honors at the Northern Lites League playoffs at Bemidji, losing to Bemidji 5-3 but beating Moorhead 6-5. Dale Wennberg and Edward Holmes coached the Pee-Wee A team this season.

Squirt A team, coached by Chuck Walrath, was a second place finisher in the Northern Lites playoffs at East Grand Forks, beating Fergus Falls 8-6, receiving a semifinal bye, then losing to Crookston 5-4 in the championship team.

Game, Fish Fund Faces Legislative Challenges

by Mike Lundgren
Times Sports Editor

Area sportsmen and conservationists might be interested in recent committee action in the Minnesota House of Representatives that may strip some $1,430,000 from the state game and fish fund.

Action Wed., March 19, approved language to transfer $700,000 from the game and fish fund to the general fund. Rep. Gordon Voss, DFL-Blaine, said there is a surplus in the game and fish fund and the state needs additional money in the general fund.

A surplus in the game and fish fund? With a seemingly endless supply of wildlife projects that could be tackled, it doesn't seem possible there could be a surplus in the game and fish fund.

On the same day IR Jim Evans, Detroit Lakes, recommended to pass for inclusion in the supplemental appropriations bill an appropriation of $730,000 from the game and fish fund to the White Earth and Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians for an agreement allowing persons who are not members of the Minnesota Chippewa Tribe to hunt, fish, trap or take minnows on the reservation.

It would seem the current method that requires those who wish to hunt or fish on the reservation.

It would seem the current method that requires those who wish to hunt or fish on the reservation to pay an extra fee when they purchase their hunting or fishing license is a workable solution. But Evans says this causes enforcement problems on the reservation.

Another committee action proposal recommended to pass by DFLer David Battaglia, Two Harbors, would allow hunters to use handguns for taking game. The bill would direct the commissioner of natural resources to prescribe regulations for use of handguns for hunting purposes.

All three proposals must go before both the house and senate.

If you would like to make your feelings known on these matters contact Rep. John Corbid of District 1-B, Room 261, State Office Building, St. Paul, MN 55155. Telephone (612) 296-4329.

Changes Made In DNR Beaver Trapping Dates

Department of Natural Resources has announced that some changes are being made in the spring beaver season.

The season opened in northern Minnesota March 1 and will open in portions of the south and southwest April 1.

A part of the northern zone that was opened March 1 will now close on March 31 instead of remaining open until April 30 as previously announced.

The revised boundaries of the open areas and the seasons that will go into effect April 1, are as follows:

+ March 1 to April 30 north of a line starting at the western border of the state at East Grand Forks on Highway 2, eastward along Highway 2 to Grand Rapids, south along Highway 169 to Hassman and then east along Highway 210 to Duluth.

+ April 1 to April 15 south and west of a line from Moorhead on the west along Highway 10 to Big Lake, south along Highway 25 to CSAH 5 (Sibley county), south on CSAH 5 to CSAH 6 (Sibley county), south on CSAH 6 to Highway 19, east on Highway 19 to Interstate 35, south on I 35 to the Iowa border.

This means that a significant portion of the state will be closed to beaver trapping, roughly a wide band running through the middle and southeastern part of Minnesota.

Minnesota Outdoors

Spring Fever

Fishing for blue gills and crapples is a sure cure for spring fever.

The sunfish came into two or three feet of water getting ready for the spawning season. The nests are often constructed in "colonies" in sand and fine gravel. Each nest may be six inches to two feet in diameter depending upon the size of the defending male, who, like the male crappie and bass, guard the nest.

If you are fly fishing under these conditions use a long gut leader, but do not use a spinner. The most effective colors are yellow or black.

Crappie Tournament

April 19 is the tentative date set for the 13th annual crappie fishing tournament on Lake Minnetonka. Lord Fletcher's is the headquarters again this year. If the ice doesn't go out by April 19 the tournament will be held the following weekend. Fishermen from several states take part in this event which for many years was held at Paul's Landing.

The Wind

An oldtime fisherman several years ago gave us this advice:

Wind from the south blows the bait in their mouth; Wind from the west... fish bite the best; Wind from the east... fish bite the least; Wind from the north... don't sally forth.

Mistakes Made In Story On Fishing Rules

In news stories calling attention to an error in the 1980 fishing regulations, the Department of Natural Resources says it made another error.

The news stories, issued on March 4 and again on March 13, pointed out that the printed fishing regulations were in error with regard to the northern pike limit on Minnesota-South Dakota boundary waters.

The correct limit is six but the printed regulations say three. But in making this correction the DNR said the fishing season opens on those boundary waters on May 13.

It doesn't. It opens on May 3.

Twenty-two leading community conservation clubs have been selected by the National Wildlife Federation to receive the 1979 President's Award for outstanding service.

All the clubs belong to the state affiliates of the 4.1 million-member NWF, and were chosen from among 6,100 eligible clubs in the 50 states, Guam, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Winners are chosen for their accomplishments in effective conservation action and environmental education programs, and for their contributions to their state affiliates.

"In addition to recognizing outstanding service by community clubs, our awards program is intended to provide inspiraton and to underscore the importance of effective member clubs to the success of our state affiliate organizations," said NWF president Dr. Fred R. Handicapped Boaters Guide Is Published

Physically handicapped people may be able to take a more active part in the sport of boating thanks to a new safety and information guide prepared under a grant from the U.S. Coast Guard.

Entitled "Boating for the Handicapped: Guidelines for the Physically Handicapped", the book was written by Dr. Eugene Hedley of the Human Resources Center, who is himself a physically handicapped boater. The guide deals largely with safety for the handicapped boater and lists the types of boating activities available to the disabled.

The book discusses personal flotation devices, emergency equipment and procedures to follow if a boat capsizes or a person falls overboard. Also covered are procedures for transferring disabled boaters to and from the dock and handling special equipment for individual needs.

His book, Hedley said, is designed to "increase recreational boating opportunities for the physically handicapped" and to provide basic guidance to rehabilitation and recreation professionals who counsel and teach handicapped persons.

Copies of Hedley's book are available by writing to the Human Resources Center, I.U. Willets Road, Albertson, N.Y. 11507. The Coast Guard grant covered the costs of printing a limited number of books which are available to the public at no charge. An unforseen demand for the publication may require a charge to pay any additional printing costs.

Coaches Explain Banquet Views

(Editor's Note: Following is a copy of a letter written by the Thief River Falls Coaches association to be used by those coaches who so desired. The association expressed the hope "that it may supply some of the reasons for the decision referred to in a recent Times editorial".)

To the Parents of Varsity Athletes:

As teachers and coaches we have been asked by the TRFEA to display our dissatisfaction with the attitude and actions of our school board.

Because of numerous cutbacks in the athletic department in recent years, including programs, coaches, hockey sticks, scouting, meals for players, travel, state tournaments for varsity coaches, late bus, equipment, films for football, and others too numerous to list, we the coaches of Lincoln high school have decided to demonstrate our dissatisfaction with the actions of the school board by supporting "work to rule". This means that we will not be organizing team banquets and other functions other than those called for in our contracts.

Except for coaches and a few very active boosters, few people seem concerned about these cuts. Actions of this type will hopefully stir some of the community to demonstrate their dissatisfaction with the direction our school board has chosen to take Thief River Falls athletics.

We take this action not to deprive this year's athletes, but in the hope that future athletes will not suffer from inadequate funding and understaffed programs.

We feel certain that parents who are concerned and involved with our athletic programs will understand the motives behind our actions. We also hope that you will support this action for the betterment of our future athletic programs. You may wish to contact a board member and express your dissatisfaction with the way our programs are being slowly but systematically dismantled.

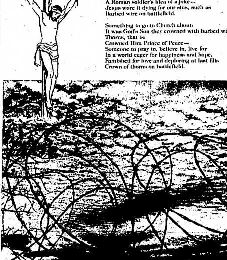
CROWN OF THORNS



Barbed wire on battlefield,
Civilization tangled in blood, suffering, death.
Christ sees it from Heaven
And remembers
The crown of thorns!
A Roman soldier's idea of a joke—
Jesus wore it dying for our sins, such as
Barbed wire on battlefield.

Something to go to Church about:
It was God's Son they crowned with barbed wire.
Thorns, that is:
Crowned Him Prince of Peace—
Someone to pray to, believe in, live for
In a world eager for happiness and hope,
Famished for love and deploring at last His Crown of thorns on battlefield.

Farming, Flooding May Destroy Many Historical Sites

by Madeleine Jacobs
Smithsonian News Service

If current agricultural and construction practices continue, much of America's cultural heritage — dating from prehistoric Indian times to the late 1800s — may literally disappear under an avalanche of dirt and water.

This is the pessimistic assessment of many archaeologists today, who point to these practices as the major threat to historic sites which have yet to be excavated.

"Biologists around the world are worried about preserving our environmental resources," says William Fitzhugh, an anthropologist and past chairman of the department of anthropology in the Smithsonian's museum of natural history. "We're facing the same problem with our cultural resources. The problem is not new — it began 200 years ago when we began developing our nation's resources."

The issue of preserving such historic sites recently came to public attention with the controversy over the Tellico dam in Tennessee. Despite the protests of various groups and individuals, including environmental bodies and Indian tribes, as well as considerable concern among some members of Congress and the executive branch, the dam will be completed. About 300 archaeological sites soon will be under water.

The irony is that most dams like the Tellico are serviceable for at most 100 years; beyond that, problems of silt and erosion put them out of commission. "But by then, thousands of years of our history will be damaged beyond recovery," Fitzhugh says.

In addition to the prehistoric Indian sites in the Little Tennessee river area where the Tellico dam was built, there are thousands of sites across the United States which contain evidence of early North American cultures — not only prehistoric Indians who lived thousands of years before the Europeans arrived in the 1500s, but later Indian tribes and early colonial settlements. A significant amount of information was gathered about prehistoric, mound-building Indian cultures by the Smithsonian's mound exploration division, which investigated some 1,600 mound centers in the 1880s in the Mississippi valley.

"Despite this body of information, we really know very little about the history of the people who lived here before us," Fitzhugh argues. "There are even areas of the country with sites from the late 1800s about which we know very little. In 50 years, they will all be gone if we don't take steps now."

There are two major threats to these sites. The first involves land privately owned by farmers or by other individuals and not subject to any federal regulations. To increase crop yields, farmers level large tracts of land, filling in low lying areas with soil from higher areas to grow soybeans, rice and other important crops. Since many of the early Indian cultures built mounds and left evidence of their cultures in these areas, the historical evidence is being destroyed. "Unfortunately," Fitzhugh says, "Many of our archaeological resources are located in exactly the same places needed by farmers — the prime river valleys."

Then, too, prehistoric artifacts are in great demand and have been fetching astronomical prices. Archaeologist Bruce Smith of the museum of natural history, who has studied the Temple Mound builders, a prehistoric Indian culture, notes that one prehistoric Indian pot recently sold for $30,000. "With prices such as these," he says, "landowners see their property as a source of income. There is incentive for them to protect the historic sites."

The second major threat to preservation of archaeological sites involves highway, dam and other construction projects, either privately or federally funded. Before protective federal laws were passed, such projects could proceed without any consideration of the historical or cultural value of the sites. However, recent federal laws require companies and the federal government to put aside about one per cent of a project's budget for survey and salvage of artifacts.

In theory, this should be a boon to archaeological preservation. In practice, it just doesn't turn out this way, according to Fitzhugh and Smith.

"While it's true that a lot of money is being put aside," Smith says, "often there is a very severe time restriction during which the archaeological investigations must be completed. Recently, only three years were allotted to archaeologists to excavate almost 600 sites in the Wallace dam area in Georgia. This is simply not adequate time.

"Archaeology is a slow, painstaking process. Even the big universities, with large archaeology departments, are not geared to doing this kind of work in such a short time frame. Comprises have to be made and sometimes the quality of the work suffers. We don't learn as much as we should or we make erroneous assumptions."

Adds Fitzhugh: "The idea that you can come in and remove artifacts quickly and surgically is fallacious. The best thing you can do to leave materials sitting right where they are, for the next 500 years if necessary, so that better methods and techniques of excavation and analysis can be developed. We need a kind of 'deep freeze' for these cultural treasures."

Development of cropland and resources such as natural gas and oil as well as important construction projects need not be abandoned or delayed, Fitzhugh says. "One problem is that many people view archaeologists as an elite group that want to inhibit progress. But you need not sacrifice preservation to progress. There are alternate methods of agriculture that do not involve plowing down fields. In China, for instance, people plant crops around historical mounds. Highway builders here in the United States can frequently choose alternate routes. The same is true for siting of dams. By planning ahead, many of these historic sites can be saved without delaying development."

And the problems, he says, are not limited to the United States. The prehistory of Mexico and South America is closely linked with the prehistory of the United Staes. Major damage has been inflicted on historic sites in Mexico as a result of oil exploration. Fitzhugh believes that international cooperation on this subject is vitally important.

"It is largely a matter that people are aware of alternatives," he says. "Usually, when a company or federal agency realizes the importance of a site, it is sympathetic to the probvems and even willing to help take steps to preserve these valuable cultural resources. There needs to be a dialogue on this subject to make people more aware."

"Except for the last few hundred years, we have almost no understanding of what happened in our country in the past," Fitzhugh adds. "There's a whole body of knowledge about the past that has to come from archaeological evidence, which adds an important dimension to written historical records. It seems almost immoral for our people not to have a better understanding of their cultural roots."

ENLISTING in the United States army's delayed entry program is Brent Thomas Waale, son of Ole and Joyce Waale of Thief River Falls, and a senior at Lincoln high school. Waale, who will leave for active duty in August, chose a four-year enlistment and will train as a photolithographer at Fort Jackson, SC. After training, he will be assigned to Germany. Waale is a member of the school newspaper, held the position of basketball manager, and is active in Prowler Report, a student radio show. He was enlisted by Sgt. Charles T. Stroup of the Thief River Falls recruiting station.

Tax Return Should Stand Audit Test

Your 1979 income tax return may be one of many that the IRS randomly selects for audit each year, so while you are preparing your return, keep that in mind. A tax audit, says the Minnesota society of certified public accountants, can be pretty painless if you have all the necessary documentation.

What makes an audit difficult, they say, is that it usually takes place a year or two after your return has been filed, and by then you might have trouble remembering a former business contact's name, not to mention your reason for taking him and his wife out to dinner back in 1979.

So right now, with events fresh in memory and documentation still at hand, is the time to prepare for that IRS interview you hope never takes place. As you assemble the facts that will go into your 1979 Form 1040, retain the receipts and cancelled checks that support your tax data. File them with your copy of the tax return.

Not only will this help you prove, if necessary, that you did indeed spend a great deal of money having your son's teeth straightened, but the existence of such thorough documentation could also serve to reassure an IRS examiner that your return would probably stand up to careful examination in any other area. If the contrary were the case — should you be unable to document a substantial deduction, let's say — the agent would be much more likely to keep on digging.

Also, although it's often possible to come up with proof by consulting other people's records — the orthodontist's, for example — this would necessitate at least one more visit with the IRS. Full, orderly documentation tends to keep contacts with the tax agency short and sweet.

Should a taxpayer try to head off a possible audit by holding deductions within the average amounts claimed by persons in his tax bracket? Certainly not, advises the CPA society; there is no sound reason for passing up legitimate claims. If your deductions are especially high, though, that's all the more reason for saving your documentation.

Also, maintaining a low profile by trying to keep within the average parameters is no assurance that you will avoid an audit. Returns pulled for audit (about one in fifty, overall) are selected by the computer, and no one outside the IRS knows exactly what criteria is used in the selection process. We do know, however, that some returns are picked strictly at random, so there is no sure way to prevent an audit.

IRS auditors can and do question any part of a return — whether all taxable income is reported, claimed exemptions are legitimate, deductions are justified and accurately reported. But when they notify you that your return is to be reviewed, they generally indicate the areas in question, so you need bring (or let your professional tax advisor bring) to the meeting documentation for just the matters in doubt. This is not to say, of course, that the examination cannot be expanded to other areas.

Randomly-selected tax returns are examined in detail each year as part of an ongoing IRS study of the degree of taxpayer compliance with the Internal Revenue code. If you are chosen for one of these examinations, expect to be questioned in depth about any or all aspects of your return — and about financial data not even included on the return.

In its conventional audits of computer-selected returns, IRS each year gives extra emphasis in certain areas. Right now, and for some months to come, agents auditing returns (most of which are for 1978) have been instructed to look closely for:

Unreported gains on sales of stock or other assets; unreported stock dividends and state tax refunds; gambling casino winnings; closing out of tax shelters, which often results in realization of income; sales of homes (without replacement) by persons who got the home-purchase tax credit in 1975 or 1976, and off-the-record barter transactions, in the so-called underground economy.

What areas will be receiving special attention when IRS gets around to auditing 1979 returns is anybody's guess, but those who follow the CPAs' advice and put aside documentary evidence should have no reason to be unduly concerned, whatever those areas may be.

Housecleaning? Look To Your Drycleaner For Help

PILLOWS

DRY-TO-DO

Spruce-up sessions around the old homestead come at any time in modern days.

No longer a spring thing, down-to-the-bare bones cleaning can be prompted by an impending visit from a mother-in-law, a week with no other obligations, a plate of spaghetti hitting the diningroom floor or a sudden surge of energy.

Why not delegate some of the cleaning to a professional who is prepared to handle bulky items, delicate items or items that you may not know how to restore?

As you take stock of what is to be done during the cleaning session, make a list of what you can send out to be readied for a sparkling clean home.

The International Fabricare Institute (IFI), the global association of launderers and drycleaners, would like you to consider these fabric facts as you plan your cleaning itinerary:

Some materials used in home furnishings are deceivably fragile. Your drycleaner will recognize them and you should too before you try home remedies. Haitian or Indian cottons, for instance, are fabrics characterized by twisted yarns that give the appearance of hand-woven fabric; but they absorb dirt and stains, tear and are susceptible to large-scale shrinking and fraying. Indian cottons are often found in bedspreads, throws and decorator pillows. An IFI member will test these fabrics before cleaning to determine the best method.

Bed pillows deserve a night out. Your cleaning session should include professional restoration of pillows in addition to occasional airing out on the clothesline. Periodic special attention will add years to the lives of down-, blended feather- or synthetically-filled pillows.

Don't be fooled by the zippers on your sofa. Upholstery fabrics are not designed to be cleaned separately. Closures are solely for the furniture manufacturer's convenience when assembling the product.

Some upholstery is not made to be drycleaned at all! If you remove and send covers off to your drycleaner, those portions, with the dirt removed, may no longer match the fabric that is not removable. If your chairs or sofas need professional attention, best you call in an upholstery cleaner.

Draperies are a decorator's dream. Your draperies, probably one of the most attractive aspects of your home decor, deserve frequent attention—a vacuuming with the brush attachment, a tumble in your dryer, a cool evening hanging on the line—and an occasional beauty session with your drycleaner. For the most successful cleaning results, advise your cleaner of the fiber content.

In a quandary over your quilts? Unless you want to spend a weekend over the washtub, call in your cleaner for your quilts. Advise him of the fillings so he can tailor the cleaning method to the materials and return a bright, fresh room accessory.

Between cleanings—hang your quilts in the fresh air.

Are you ready now for your bucket and scrub brush?

There are snails on her plate! Marie (Bernadette Peters) refuses to look at them, in Universal's rags to riches to rags story "The Jerk," now showing at the Galaxy Twin Theatre.

Food Stamp Benefits May Be Cut June 1

Food stamp benefits for close to 20 million Americans may be suspended June 1, U.S. agriculture secretary Bob Bergland said recently.

In a letter to the 50 governors, District of Columbia and the U.S. territories, Bergland said he has advised Congress that funds for food stamp benefits will be nearly gone by the end of May. "Unless Congress appropriates additional funds by May 15, I will be forced to order a suspension of food stamp benefits effective June 1, 1980," Bergland said.

The food stamp program is running out of money, according to Bergland, "because the legislative ceiling on expenditures for fiscal year 1980 was set at $6.189 billion. That figure, established by Congress in 1977, was based on predictions that unemployment would average 5.7 per cent in fiscal 1980 and that food prices would increase 13 per cent over the three year period from fiscal 1977 to fiscal 1980.

Each one per cent increase in unemployment adds 750,000 to 1 million people to the program, while a one per cent increase in inflation adds $58 million to food stamp costs.

An extremely tight congressional schedule and requirements of the budgetary process complicate the food stamp situation, Bergland explained in his letter to the states. Although the Senate has approved legislation to remove the cap on food stamp spending and the House agriculture committee completed its work on the measure recently, action will still be needed on the House floor and in the appropriations committees of both houses of Congress.

But the actual appropriation of additional funds for food stamps may not be possible unless and until Congress passes a third budget resolution for FY 1980, according to Bergland. A second resolution approved in November has no room for additional appropriations of any size, and passage of a third resolution is not expected until at least mid-May. Meanwhile, Bergland said he must issue an order to states on May 15 to suspend June benefits if sufficient funds are not available.

Bergland's letter to the states also noted that reductions in food stamp benefits will be ordered "if at any time before May 15, Congress indicates additional food stamp funding will not be provided."

In a separate letter to the Senate and House agriculture committees February 15, Bergland noted that the administration has been working closely with the Congress since early in 1979 to avert a funding crisis and that the various committees with responsibility for food stamp appropriations have expressed their intentions to provide adequate funds.

"The FY 1980 agriculture appropriations conference report directs the department to continue the current level of benefits until authorizing legislation is passed and there is an opportunity to provide for additional appropriations," Bergland said.

About 19.6 million people received benefits in November of 1979. The average food stamp benefits in that month was $32.70 per person, or 36 cents per person per meal.

ENERGY UPDATE

TELEVISION NUCLEAR NEWS INCOMPLETE

Leonard J. Theberge, the Executive Director of the Media Institute believes you may not be getting all the information you should about nuclear energy.

Theberge

People who relied on television news programs as their source of information simply have not received enough knowledge to judge the risks and benefits of the nuclear power generation issue.

That's one of the conclusions reached by The Media Institute, a Washington-based non-profit organization, following a study analyzing 10 years of network television evening news programming.

The Institute also finds that, perhaps unintentionally, the broadcasts have been biased as a result of methods used to report, edit and present information about nuclear power generation.

Television network news coverage in the 10 years prior to 1979 was minimal, asserts the Institute. About one-quarter of one percent of news time was devoted to nuclear power. Then came Three Mile Island. On March 28, 1979, a nuclear power reactor at that location in Pennsylvania experienced an accident, often called the "worst accident in the history of nuclear power generation."

News coverage of that incident was heavy, included plenty of "peripheral" comment,—background information not contributing to a better understanding of the issues—and tended to be biased with known anti-nuclear organizations and individuals allotted the majority of available time for comments, the Institute found. Although the networks, to their credit, did try to explain how reactors work and did use some comment from sources generally regarded as reliable and knowledgeable, the explanations and comments made up only a minor portion of news programs.

The Media Institute was organized in 1978. Leonard J. Theberge, its Executive Director, notes that more and more people are increasingly disturbed by communications trends in the nation. Survey after survey had disclosed that most people obtain their news from television. Theberge believes that the small amount of time allotted to coverage of economic issues in television programming and the amount of material crammed into the limited time slots precluded television staffs from providing vital perspective information.

The nuclear issue, selected before the Three Mile Island accident, is the first of several the Institute plans to study in an attempt to determine whether the American public is receiving enough information about critical issues to formulate objective opinions. Other studies underway include television coverage of inflation and several major industries.

MPCA Plans Hearings On Water Quality

Minnesota pollution control agency (MPCA) is beginning an extensive public hearing schedule for proposed amendments to the state's water quality rules. Hearings will be held at the MPCA's Roseville office the week of March 31 with subsequent hearings in five locations throughout the state.

Minnesota's rules classify state waters to determine how much protection needs to be given specific waterways. The primary focus of the hearings will be on water quality standards for ammonia, chlorine, dissolved oxygen and fecal coliform organisms.

In addition, the amendments being proposed create a new classification of waters — limited resource value waters. Requirements for the classification are that existing and potential fishery must be severly limited by natural conditions, human activity has irreversibly altered the water quality, and limited recreational opportunities exist.

The hearing schedule includes a session April 8 at 7 p.m. and April 9 at 9 a.m. at the city administration building, 1025 Roosevelt avenue in Detroit Lakes.

At the hearings, agency staff will justify and explain the proposed amendments. All interested and affected persons will have the opportunity to participate in the hearings.

In addition, written statements may be submitted to Hearing Examiner Allan Klein, 1745 University Avenue, St. Paul, MN 55104.

Copies of the proposed amendments and other documents may be obtained by contacting Lanny Peissig at (612) 296-7297 or write MPCA, Surface and Groundwaters Section, Division of Water Quality, 1935 West County Road B2, Roseville, MN 55113.

Pets May Need Assistance At Delivery Time

by Robert L. Stear, D.V.M.

Although most cats and dogs are perfectly capable of delivering their young without assistance, some timely aid from the pet owner or veterinarian is often helpful. Here are a few suggestions to remember at your pet's delivery time, which will be approximately 63 days after conception.

Expect your dog to begin labor within a few hours if she suddenly refuses to eat, becomes restless and looks for shelter under tables and chairs. Your pregnant cat will also wander from room to room, and head for the nest-like area she may have prepared in a closet, open drawer or box.

Deliveries do not follow any set pattern. The new born may arrive 10 minutes apart, or 60 minutes apart. Whatever the case, if your pet has not had her offspring after several hours of continuous labor, she needs professional help.

In my experience, whelping dogs require more assistance than cats. There has been more selective breeding in dogs, occasionally producing a pelvic arch so small that puppies may not pass through the birth canal. Certain small breeds are prone to this condition, which may require your veterinarian to perform a Caesarian section.

If you have a very large dog, you also need to alert your veterinarian in advance. Boxers, St. Bernards and similar breeds frequently need help when a puppy with a large head becomes lodged in the birth canal, blocking the passage for the entire litter.

When puppies arrive, the mother immediately tears open with her teeth the sac enclosing the youngster, thus allowing it to breathe. The mother will also lick her offspring clean, providing rough massage at the same time. The massage stimulates the circulation

If the young arrive in too rapid succession, the mother may become dazed or overlooked one or two. Then it is up to you to administer primary care to some of the newborn. After the puppy's mouth and nose are cleared of mucus, the umbilical cord should be cut an inch or two from the puppy, and a knot tied near the base of the cord with thread or dental floss. After the puppy is gently dried with a towel, it can be returned to the mother.

Occasionally a puppy is slow to start breathing. If this happens, provide massage with a towel, then swing the puppy gently, head downward to try to clear the air passages. Often it is necessary to work on a puppy for several minutes before it begins breathing.

As the puppies arrive, make sure you note the delivery of one afterbirth per pup. A retained afterbirth can be the source of a serious infection in the uterus, so all afterbirths should be accounted for.

After the puppies are delivered and the wet bedding is removed, place the puppies alongside their mother so they can begin nursing. If you see that the mother cannot accomodate all the puppies simultaneously, call your veterinarian immediately to discuss a hand-feeding schedule for part of the litter.

Erskine Named Superintendent Of State BCA

John D. (Jack) Erskine, 36, Roseville, police chief for the past two years, was appointed February 13 as new superintendent of the Minnesota bureau of criminal apprehension. Appointment was made by commissioner John P. Sopsic of the Minnesota department of public safety.

Erskine assumes the position March 3. Acting director if Floyd Roman, an assistant superintendent of the bureau.

Sopsic, in announcing the selection, said it was the result of Erskine's "professional achievement, academic accomplishment and technical training. His professional attitude toward service to the law enforcement community and his hands on experience at various levels are factors in the appointment. Jack is enthusiastic, dynamic and an enforcement team player."

Sopsic said the appointment "reinforces my intention to develop and provide the best support services possible to law enforcement contingencies representing the police, sheriffs and appropriate state departments."

Sopsic added that he "challenged Erskine to assist in devising new and better ways of providing expertise to local police departments. This includes speedier lab service and developing responsive in-service training programs to law enforcement personnel statewide."

Erskine's job will be to "manage the BCA as efficiently and effectively as possible, reflecting the changing character of crime," Sopcis said.

The new superintendent is a former agent for the U.S. department agriculture office of investigation in Kansas City, a post he held in 1977-78. He was director of police and fire services at Excelsior Springs, Mo., from 1972-77. For two years he was special agent for the U.S. Treasury dept., bureau of alcohol, tobacco and firearms in Kansas and from 1968-70 was senior service analyst for the Michigan medical service in Detroit. He was a patrolman for five years in suburban Detroit.

Erskine has an associate of arts degree in criminal justice from Maple Woods community college in Kansas City and a bachelor of arts degree in criminal justice administration from Avila college in Kansas City. He has 15 hours of graduate credit in criminal justice administration.

Post Offices Valued

Rural residents value their post offices highly — a statement of fact that will come as no surprise to anyone in this part of the country. The fact is further emphasized in a study by Richard J. Margolis which covered 37 small towns in 19 states.

Margolis said that during his investigations ". . .I found not a single rural citizen who seemed prepared to give up his local post office without a murmur. As we have seen, the marriage between Americans and their post offices has endured much too long, and has been far too successful, to permit anything but a painful separation."

The writer points out that congressional debate over post offices is a long-standing one, dating back to the first postal deficit in 1820, and involves rural and urban interests in postal policy. Urban interests seek economy through consolidations and rural interests seek to retain services which admittedly may not be self-supporting.

Margolis points out that the rural post office is not only a place to buy stamps and pick up the mail. This is the way he describes what he noted during his study:

"The village post office is a medium for a variety of messages, from political news to local gossip. It is the place where residents are likely to learn of the comings and goings of their neighbors, of births and deaths, weddings and reunions, travels and returns.

"Other institutions in town — notably churches, schools and civic clubs — may also from time to time transmit important information to the townspeople; but because of its central location in its daily use by residents, the post office looms as the village's most reliable purveyor of news. In recent decades, moreover. . the post office's role as communications center has expanded.

"Older rural citizens whose eyes may be too dim to read small print often ask postal workers to read aloud contracts and other documents. In some cases, the postal worker not only explains the document in hand, he or she helps the resident to write a suitable response. . .No less than the rural elderly, the small-town poor and semi-literate frequently rely on local postal workers for special assistance.

"The physical signs inside these post offices — signs of easy, day-to-day intimacy — are unmistakable: the fresh cut flowers in the tiny lobby; the amateurish photography tacked on a bulletin board — of a neighbor fisherman, for instance, holding his prize catch; the simmering pot of coffee and the paper cups stacked by the percolator.

"For many small-town citizens the post office remains an essential institution, not only as a collector and distributor of the mails but also as a meeting place, a news center and a provider of special services — services commonly required by rural residents. . .Only when the post office's survival is threatened, or when some outlander like myself comes along with a list of questions, do villagers consciously consider the value of their post office."

Inflation Threatens Destruction

Following editorial is from the Grand Rapids Herald-Review:

Persistent and growing inflation is a sign that there are serious things wrong with the economy of the United States and the rest of the world.

Rising prices have been eating into people's incomes for more than 30 years. At first the rates of inflation were relatively low and could be tolerated. But in recent years price increases have exceeded 10 per cent per year. Most people now find their incomes after taxes are not keeping up with the increases in prices they must pay for the necessities and the other goods and services they have become accustomed to.

While inflation is the result of many complex factors, it creates an attitude among people which stimulates more inflation. Instead of cutting back on purchases and saving money for an uncertain future, most people dip into their savings and borrow heavily to buy things they believe will cost more in the future. It seems the smart thing to do especially when rates of return on normal investments are less after taxes than the rate of inflation. Thus higher prices are supported than would otherwise be the case, and people seek higher incomes to pay higher prices as inflation spirals upward.

America can not continue down the road of rampant inflation without reaching a time when the economy will collapse. Without greatly increased savings by people, it will be impossible to make the improvements in productivity which are necessary to maintain reasonable standards of living.

But how can we shift from an inflation economy to a more solid one? Wage and price controls were tried during World War II, but they helped only temporarily. They were tried again a decade ago and soon had to be abandoned. President Carter has tried to establish voluntary guidelines for prices and wages, and they have done little good. Inflation is a very tough problem because of the strong hold it has gained on the economy and also because of sharply rising oil costs.

Frankly, we don't know of any simple thing that can be done to substantially reduce inflation. President Carter may have been on the right track when he initially talked of changing the expectations of the people from one of rapidly increasing prices to one of more moderate increases, with a leveling off over a period of a few years. If people could believe that would actually happen, then labor, industry and everyone else would not need to be so insistent about raising their prices.

It seems to us that if a crash in the economy is to be avoided, we must reach a concensus in this country that we can lick inflation. This will require wise and vigorous leadership by a President who is determined to do that and who has the ability to develop and sell such a program to the people and to congress.

Beating inflation will involve many difficult decisions. One will be to bring the federal budget into balance at a time when defense expenditures must be increased, and this will involve cutting back on some social programs many people want. It will require implementation of federal energy programs which will conserve oil and shift principally to coal and unclear energy sources, to which some environmentalists object. It will mean that workers will have to accept smaller increases in money income now in the hopes of achieving more real income in the future. Industry and business will have to achieve objectives which hold down prices and at the same time generate funds for reinvestment in improved plants. Financial institutions and government will have to take steps to see that investment funds are available for the most desirable projects at the expense of those which are less essential. To reduce inflation, people and government at all levels will have to be more prudent in their activities.

In this election year, every presidential candidate is talking about inflation. We hope that voters will evaluate the candidates in large measure on the basis of who will be best able to lead this nation away from inflation and toward a sound economy where reasonable standards of living can be maintained.

Another four years of failure to meet the problems which are producing rampant inflation may well destroy the ability of this nation to serve its citizens and to help others in a troubled world.

Remember The Bustle?

If one is to believe the fashion advertising campaigns of late, milady's posterior is once again the fashion focal point. It is to be slimmed, shaped, packaged for display without nasty lines which indicate human efforts to tamper with nature.

Such was not the case in the days of the bustle when the protrusion at the rear of the lady's skirt was obviously artificial. While today's profusion of fanny shapers involves all manner of modern materials and innovative ideas, none are likely to match the ingenuity displayed by former craftsmen.

An item in an old issue of the Wadena Pioneer-Journal described the item as follows:

"A new bustle patented in Kansas has just come into use, with a blowoff safety valve. When the wearer sits down, the wind escapes up her spine, loosaning her corset strings and blowing her bangs into fashionable position. When she stands up, the action tightens the strings and expands her bustle, whistles her dog and sticks a pin into her drowsy escort."

Now THAT'S ingenuity.

Borrowed Nonsense:

Quotable Quotes: The lion and the calf shall lie down together — but the calf won't get much sleep (Woody Allen). . .The race is not always to the swift nor the battle to the strong, but that's the way to bet (Damon Runyon). . .Never insult an alligator until you have crossed the river (Cordell Hull). . . .The meek shall inherit the earth, but not its mineral rights (J. Paul Getty).

Home Buyer Profile Shown By Survey

In 1979, the typical first-time home buyer was 28 years old, had a family with 2.5 persons, took 3.9 months to look for a home, paid a median price of $50,800, and made an average down payment of 17.6 per cent of the purchase price.

Repeat buyer in 1979, on the other hand, was 34.7 years old, had 3.5 persons in the family, took 3.5 months to seek a home, paid a median price of $64,600, and made an average down payment of 29 per cent of the purchase price.

These buyers profiles are provided by the family housing bureau, a public information service of a large insurance company and are based on the bureau's fourth annual survey of recent home buyers. Survey was conducted in 11 representative markets nationwide and involved 400 completed interviews.

Most of the home buyers surveyed, or 82.8 per cent, were married, the study revealed.

Ratio of used homes to new homes purchased paralleled other survey years, with those purchasing homes previously lived in accounting for 82.2 per cent of the total in 1979. In 1978, the percentage was 85.6.

During 1979, the typical home buyer looked at 12 homes and made a buying decision in 3.7 months. In 1978, buyers looked at fewer homes, 10.7, and made a purchasing decision in 3.6 months.

The median price of $50,800 paid by first-time buyers in 1979 compared with $46,700 in 1978, $43,160 in 1977, and $37,670 in 1976. For repeat buyers, the median price of $64,600 paid in 1979 compares with $59,180 in 1978, $58,730 in 1977 and $50,090 in 1976.

First-timers in 1979 made down payments avergaing 17.6 per cent of the purchase price, compared with 12.4 per cent in 1978. Repeat buyers put down 29 per cent of the price, compared with 27.6 per cent in 1978.

As in previous study years, the repeat buyer made a buying decision more quickly than the first-time buyer did. First time buyers surveyed shopped for an average of 3.9 months vs. 3.5 months for repeat buyers in 1979. This compares to four months for first time buyers and 3.3 months for repeat buyers in 1978.

Repeat buyer apparently has a better feel for the market and relies on past experience in making a selection more quickly, the family housing bureau said.

While some fluctuation would be expected based on local market conditions, nationally single-family houses accounted for 87.5 per cent of purchases made by survey respondents, multiple family houses for 5.3 per cent and condominiums for 6.8 per cent. In 1978, single-family houses accounted for 86.6 per cent, multiple family houses 7.6 per cent and condominiums 5.6 per cent of the total.

Average age of the first-time buyer has fluctuated little in the past four study years. In 1979 the average was 28.4 years. It was 28.3 years in 1978, 28.2 years in 1977 and 28.1 years in 1976.

For the repeat buyer, the average age in 1979 was 23.7 years, compared to 35.5 years in 1979, 37.9 years in 1977 and 35.9 years in 1976.

Existing home sales continue to outdistance new home sales, but new home sales did register a slight gain in the most recent survey. In 1979, 82.2 per cent of respondents purchased houses previously lived in vs. 85.6 per cent in 1978, 87.2 per cent in 1977 and 84.9 per cent in 1976.

Family housing bureau survey was made as part of the company's continuing program to foster interest in home ownership.

Contrary to popular opinion, underinflated tires don't provide better traction on slick surfaces, says the Tire Industry Safety Council. Underinflation causes excessive heat buildup, which reduces tread life and wastes gasoline.

helpful hints

YOU: ON THE MOVE?

Ever since a group of colonists in Plymouth Bay began to feel hemmed in, Americans have been a people on the move. If you're ready to make your move, here are some hints to help it go more smoothly.

If you have the choice, try to avoid moving during the summer rush and the rush at the end of each month. That's when the heaviest demands are placed on the equipment and the personnel of moving companies.

The earlier you advise the moving company of the date of your move, the more likely you'll be able to have your things moved on your preferred date. Try to give between four and six weeks' advance notice if possible.

To get an idea of the cost of the move, ask your moving company to have its agent make a pre-move survey of your household goods. United Van Lines, one of the leading movers of household goods, points out that an agent will compute the approximate cost of the move and give you a written estimate at no charge. Remember, however, this is an estimate, not binding either on you or the company.

For an easier move, get moving early!

The exact cost of your move can't be determined until after your shipment has been loaded on the van and weighed. The basic transportation charges will depend on the actual weight of your goods and the distance they travel.

Moving companies offer services to make moving easier on you. For instance, for an extra charge at your request, you can have your goods packed and unpacked. Or, if you can't take immediate possession of your new home, most companies will store your things in a local warehouse till you're ready for them.

Hamline Offers Masters In Liberal Studies

Hamline University in St. Paul will inaugurate the first master of arts in liberal studies degree in the Upper Midwest with the first courses offered this summer.

The university joins a small group of colleges such as Dartmouth, Georgetown, The Johns Hopkins university, the University of California and Southern Methodist university in offering mature students the opportunity for a master's degree in liberal studies. Hamline's program seeks to meet the needs of graduate students who prefer a master's degree which is broad rather than narrow and specialized. It further extends Hamline's commitment to the liberal arts and the validity of graduate as well as undergraduate liberal arts education.

It will be assumed that participants have their vocational and technical skills well in hand, and that they will be seeking some of the deeper philosophical implications, values and meanings of education, work and culture. The program is founded upon the integrity of the liberal arts as a unified whole. Student-teacher interaction will be stressed. "Contemporary Issues in Historical Perspective" is the program theme.

Courses will be offered year-round. Fall and spring courses will be at night for the benefit of persons who work full-time on a job or at home during the day. Summer courses, expected to have special appeal to teachers, will be taught both day and night. Although full-time day attendance is possible, the program is primarily intended to serve the part-time, evening student. Summer-only students may complete the program in three intensive summers.

The program consists of three interdisciplinary Masters seminars, four elective courses, a program of directed readings, and a "synthesis" consisting of an original final project by the student. The Synthesis is intended to demonstrate a student's ability to integrate disparate materials, draw independent conclusions and to widely communicate the results.

Persons interested in the program may obtain more information by writing the Graduate Liberal studies office, Hamline University, St. Paul, MN 55104, or by calling 641-2205. Program director is Dr. Jack Johnson, who is also associate dean of Hamline's College of Liberal arts and director of its Center for academic development. Associate director is Robin Jensen-Lamb, who will work exclusively with administration of the program.

NEWS OF TRAVEL

U.S.A.: INCREASINGLY COSMOPOLITAN

For Americans in the south and southwest, the whole world is closer to home than ever before.

The growing importance of America's south and southwest has recently been underscored by a leading international airline which will soon begin wide-bodied jet service linking Dallas, Fort Worth and Atlanta directly with Europe.

Starting date for the three times weekly service, offered by Lufthansa German Airlines, is May 1. Eastbound flights will depart from Dallas/Fort Worth, stop in Atlanta and then continue nonstop to Frankfurt. The flights between the two U.S. gateways and Germany will operate on Mondays, Thursdays and Fridays.

The airline's low point-to-point "Holiday" fares will allow not only Americans from the south and southwest to visit Germany, but will also allow German travelers to fly directly into Georgia and Texas.

The east and westbound flights will offer the full range of inflight services found on Lufthansa's other North Atlantic routes: for its first class passengers — all the amenities of its traditional "Senator Service; for full-fare economy passengers — a special business class section immediately behind the first class cabin.

Last year, the airline began service to Miami and San Francisco, the first two of the six additional U.S. gateways granted to Germany in the new bilateral aviation agreement. Dallas and Atlanta bring the current total of gateways to ten. The six other cities which Lufthansa serves are New York, Chicago, Philadelphia/Boston, Los Angeles and Anchorage.

AAP Says Teen Medical Record Privacy Needed

Teen-agers should have the privacy of their medical records guaranteed, according to the American Academy of pediatrics (AAP) which recently made its position official.

Speaking before U.S. legislators, Adele Hoffman, MD, FAAP, chairperson of the AAP section on adolescent health, said that lawmakers must avoid the "all-too common by ill-founded presumption that any legislation addressing the privacy rights of adults is modified for minors simply by providing that parents exercise those rights on behalf of their children." She urges them instead to acknowledge adolescents' increasing competence in giving an informed consent for health care and the release of their medical records.

Elizabeth K. Jerome, MD, medical director of the teenage medical service in Minneapolis and vocal advocate for adolescents, commented on the AAP action. "It's high time we recognize that once we've given adolescents individual rights (that is the right to receive health care based on their own consent) we have to protect their rights by guaranteeing the confidentiality of their medical records."

"One of the most difficult tasks of society," says Dr. Jerome, "is figuring out when and how to let the cloak of responsibility fall on its youth. A toddler who steps into danger must be protected from harm by parents. Adolescents, however, who are both knowing and increasingly capable of making decisions concerning their own welfare, must be allowed to assume responsibility for themselves."

Attempting to provide for the different levels of maturity in the developmental process of adolescence, the AAP offered these guidelines for handling the medical records of minors:

Parents should have authority for consent to release of all medical records of children less than age 12; parental and minors' consent both should be required for record release for patients between 12 and 14; all minors 15 or older and those under this age who have given sole consent to health services and-or have conveyed confidential information documented in the record should consent unilaterally to the release of their record; and persons under the age of majority and eligible to exercise rights conjointly or independently may elect to waive these rights and assign them to parents, guardian or legal representative or, in the absence of such an individual, to another adult of the minor's choice.

The issue of privacy of adolescents' medical records and their right to give informed consent to health care has been controversial because some claim it tampers with the solidarity of the family.

Dr. Jerome, however, explains that "physicians don't want to take responsibility for teen-agers away from parents. Health care professionals want to work with parents to give teenagers the best chance to grow up to be healthy, responsible adults."

The real problem is that teen-agers aren't seeking the medical help they need because they aren't sure of the privacy of their records, says Dr. Jerome. "Easy access for adolescents to quality health care should be our top priority."

Early Cultures Are Subjects Of Study

Smithsonian News Service

For most of us, American history begins in the 1600s when European colonists settled on the East Coast. But clues to America's more distant past may actually be buried in our own backyards, especially those in the Mississippi valley. For it is there, in the rich, fertile floodplains of the valley, that many "prehistoric" Indians, living hundreds of years ago and predating modern Indian tribes, built their homes and left evidence of their cultures.

Time and dirt have covered these over, but, increasingly, archaeologists looking for America's roots are digging into these prehistoric sites. Among these modern-day explorers is Dr. Bruce Smith of the Smithsonian institution's museum of natural history in Washington, D.C.

"We now know that man lived in America for many thousands of years before European explorers and settlers arrived and we want to learn more about these cultures," he explains. "Unfortunately, many sites are disappearing because of construction and agricultural practices.

"By the year 2000, virtually all evidence of prehistoric occupation of the Mississippi valley will have vanished. If we don't make an attempt now, we'll never know about these cultures."

Smith has studied the "Temple Mound builders," who lived between 800 and 1600 A.D. in the Mississippi valley and elsewhere in the United States. His research is an outgrowth of pioneering studies of these indigenous American Indians by the Smithsonian's mound exploration division nearly 100 years ago.

"From their research, we know that the Temple Mound builders were primarily farmers who attained the highest level of cultural development in North America prior to the European involvement," Smith says. "This took the form of a sophisticated 'chiefdom' level of organization, with an elite group that made many of the decisions facing their society."

The mounds themselves marked the ceremonial, administrative and defensive center of the chiefdom, which ranged in size from 500 to more than 1,000 people. Most of these people lived in small villages and on single-family farmsteads. The elite, however, lived in a fortified ceremonial center with their structures and houses built on rectangular, flat-topped earthen mounds, constructed from thousands of basketloads of dirt from the river valley.

One of the 1,600 mound centers investigated by the mound exploration division was the Powers "Fort" in southeastern Missouri. Division members excavated and described the ceremonial center of the chiefdom in the early 1880s, but further research was not undertaken until the 1960s when a University of Michigan research team, including Smith, excavated several outlying villages. In 1974 Smith directed a group of students in the first excavation of a single-family farmstead of the Powers Chiefdom. "Our goal was to learn more about the everyday life of an average, non-elite Indian family," he recalls.

How does an archaeologist reconstruct the lives of people who left only fragmentary shreds of their existence?

"It's like putting together the pieces of a complex puzzle," he says. "The objects by themselves do not tell us very much — we have to see how they are located in relationship to each other and in what context they are found. That's why excavations are so slow and tedious. Also, even before you select a site you have to know what questions you want answered."

Smith wanted to learn how long and during what seasons the site was occupied, the size and composition of the occupying group, activities carried out at the site and the overall role of the site in the chiefdom.

Working under the hot Missouri sun, student archaeologists took 10 weeks to excavate the 8,000-square-foot site. Soil disturbed by the plow was first removed, revealing the remains of two houses and series of pits where different activities such as butchering and cooking apparently were carried out. Soil was then carefully scraped away with small trowels, grapefruit knives and spoons, uncovering additional artifacts one by one. Each item was photographed in place, assigned a number and bagged. Next, all dirt excavated was washed through a fine screen, revealing very small items. The steps were repeated until sterile soil was reached.

Ultimately, almost 50,000 objects — ranging from flakes of stone and ceramics, clay fragments, bones of small animals and fish, nut fragments, seeds and other plant remains — were recovered from the entire site.

Smith personally examined each of these items and was able to identify the function of about half, a process that took three years and hundreds of laboratory hours. To distinguish man-related artifacts from those formed by nature, objects were compared with other known and documented objects and with those found at the site. Patterns of wear were examined with a microscope; radiocarbon dating helped determine the age of organic materials, such as charred wood from the house posts.

Armed with this detailed analysis, Smith began to put together a picture of life at the farmstead. He concluded that around 1300 A.D. an extended family of five to seven males and females lived at this site for one to three years.

"From bones and tools found, we know that the males hunted white-tailed deer, raccoon, fox, squirrel, beaver, rabbit and wild turkey during the fall and winter and fish and waterfowl during the spring and summer," he says. "One of the two houses seemed to be used for sleeping and keeping warm during the winter. The other house was the center of daily life at the farm, with broken pottery vessels and tools recovered from inside testifying to the wide variety of activities that were carried out there. From this evidence, we concluded that the site was occupied year-round."

He also found evidence of food preparation such as cooking equipment and remains of wild plants and nuts from hickory and oak trees. Just as hunting is traditionally a male-oriented activity in Indian cultures, food preparation is the province of females, Smith says. Both males and females, however, probably raised squash, corn and beans in a domesticated garden. The farmstead was about two miles from the fortified mound village and Smith believes that the family went to the village for important ceremonies and to seek protection against attacks.

Concluding his story, Smith says, "These prehistoric Indians were not eking out a precarious hand-to-mouth existence in a hostile landscape. Far from it. They existed in a naturally abundant environment and used a variety of its energy sources in a way that did not endanger nor drastically modify it."

The single-family farmstead provided a piece of the puzzle, but the larger puzzle is how the mound-building way of life developed and how chiefdoms emerged from earlier cultures. Smith plans to continue this investigation in an area about 100 miles northeast of the Powers Chiefdom. The goal of this long-term project is to determine changes in settlement and subsistence patterns throughout the entire prehistoric period in this particular region.

On a more philosophical level, there are many questions that will never be answered — What, for example, were the hopes and aspirations of these peoples? "We may never figure out what caused these cultures to decline and fade away around 1500 A.D.," Smith says, "but perhaps we can learn something from these people who lived so successfully with their environment for hundreds of years."

NEWS OF HEALTH

For Females

Certain annoying infections may sometimes be quite dangerous.

Many females, at one time or another, may be treated for the vexing problems of vaginitis. Actually, vaginitis is a general diagnostic term that covers several different types of infection, including trichomonas, candida (thrush) and monilia.

The symptoms that most frequently alert women to the possibility of being victims of vaginitis are unusual color or foul odor of the normal vaginal discharge and/or irritation: chafing, soreness, or burning sensation.

Vaginal infections can only be diagnosed through a microscope and should always be treated by a physician. Although these infections are generally more of a nuisance than a threat, they can become quite serious, especially during pregnancy, because of the possibility of infecting the unborn child. Natural changes in the body chemistry during pregnancy also increase susceptiblity to candida.

In treating vaginitis, many gynecologists are now using a potent germ killer, Betadine Douche, which contains the same ingredients used by N.A.S.A. in its moon and space programs.

Unlike other treatments, Betadine Douche is a broad-spectrum, anti-microbial agent that is very effective against several of the microbidices that cause vaginitis. Considered scientifically and clinically reliable in the control and treatment of trichomona, monilia, and nonspecific vaginitis, the new medical treatment is virtually nonirritating to skin and delicate mucous tissues.

Various factors contribute to the development of vaginal infections. Among these are generally lowered resistance resulting from illness, poor diet, or lack of sleep, or the use of certain antibiotics, oral contraceptives and other medicines. These infections can be transmitted sexually to the male partner, who often must be treated with an oral medication.

Use Caution With Home Drug Storage

Shelves of our supermarkets, discount houses and drug stores contain a dizzying array of medicines that can be bought without a prescription. Called over-the-counter drugs, they are big business in this country, accounting for about $4.8 billion in yearly sales.

Some are effective medications for minor illnesses and should find their way home to our medicine cabinets; others do little more than waste our money, according to pharmacist Henry Blissenbach of a St. Paul hospital.

The dilemma of what to keep on hand should be prefaced by certain truths about drugs, he said. Just because a drug can be purchased without a prescription doesn't mean it is automatically safe. Used in effective dosages, all drugs have the potential for side effects.

"Recent studies on hospital admissions for adverse drug reactions show that 20 per cent were caused by over-the-counter medications," Blissenbach said.

For this reason, once you have decided to self-medicate yourself, you should read all label warnings and carefully follow dosage recommendations. Persons who have serious diseases or who are taking prescription drugs should consult their doctors before taking any over-the-counter drugs.

Most over-the-counter preparations are best bought when the need arises, Blissenbach said, but a few should be kept on hand at all times. Shelf life varies but a growing number of over-the-counter drugs now have their expiration date stamped on the package, thus making it important to keep them in their original container.

Topping the list of "musts," particularly in homes with children, is Syrup of Ipecac, used to induce vomiting with many poisonings. Although ipecac should not be used unless directed by a doctor or local poison control center, waiting to buy it until an emergency occurs can be too late. Less than two per cent of the people who call the Minnesota poison control center (298-8402) have ipecac on hand, Blissenbach said.

Another basic requirement for the home medicine shelf is aspirin or acetaminophen. For controlling fever, lessening pain and reducing inflammation, aspirin truly is a "Wonder Drug." Aspirin is not, however, without side effects and should be used with caution by asthmatics and others with hypersensitivity problems. People who have ulcers or who are taking anticoagulants or gout medicine should not take aspirin. It also can be irritating to the stomach lining and some people can't tolerate it; for those persons a specially coated aspirin or a non-aspirin analgesic, like acetaminophen, should be used.

Acetaminophen (such as Tylenol, Datril) is an effective pain and fever reliever but does not have the anti-inflammatory activity of aspirin. It is also more expensive. Since it's generally without stomach irritation, pediatricians often recommend it for children. Because aspirin deteriorates faster than acetaminophen, you should probably not buy it in bottles larger than 100 tablets. A strong vinegry odor indicates you need a new bottle.

The home pharmacy could also include an antacid, Blissenbach said. Antacids neutralize stomach acid and are used to relieve heartburn, upset stomach and gas pains. There are many different antacids available, many with different ingredients. Some have sodium bicarbonate, a good antacid, but too much can occasionally cause a "rebound" effect in some people; that is, the stomach may be stimulated to secrete more acid, thus adding to the problem. Others contain magnesium or aluminum or both and can be upsetting to the bowels.

Blissenbach recommends using the one that works best for you and cautions against use for more than a week at a time unless under a physician's supervision. Also check with your doctor or pharmacist before using these compounds if you have kidney disease, heart disease or high blood pressure.

Dozens of products are highly touted by advertisements as effective against the common cold. It's important to remember that these products don't cure colds, but many do give satisfactory symptomatic relief, Blissenbach said.

Although as a general rule single ingredient drugs are preferable to multi-ingredient drugs, he continued, most cold preparations contain at least a decongestant and an antihistamine. The decongestant acts to shrink swollen mucus membranes and small blood vessels, thus decreasing secretions. The antihistamine dries mucus decretions and attempts to block allergic responses.

Cold preparations may cause a number of side effects from drowsiness and dry mouth to increased heart rate, bladder problems and temporary visual disturbances. They should not be taken with alcohol.

"You're better off identifying the particular problem you're trying to treat, be it a sore throat, cough, or whatever, and selecting an agent specifically designed to treat that symptom," Blissenbach said. "Here your pharmacist can be a great help."

Used correctly, for example, nose drops with a decongestant as the active ingredient may provide effective but temporary relief for a runny, stuffy nose. But don't use them for more than three days or a "rebound" effect occurs, only making the problem worse.

Your home medicine shelf could also include a preparation of kaolin and pectin for relief of occasional diarrhea. These medicines are considered safe but should not be taken without medical advice for more than two days or when a fever is present. Persons under six, those over 60 with a poor health history and pregnant women should not take them.

Another over-the-counter preparation Blissenbach says you may want to have on hand is a phenolated calamine lotion for the relief of minor skin irritations caused by insect bites, poisonous plants or certain illnesses. Phenol is an astringent, which produces a cooling effect, and calamine relieves itching.

Drugs that don't belong on your medicine shelf are old, half-used prescription drugs. If you've been squirreling these away because you don't know what to do with them, put them in a bag and take them to your pharmacy where they can be disposed of properly.

Making Family Life More Fun

STAR WARS SWEEPSTAKES: DEADLINE APRIL 1

You can win a trip to Washington, D.C. for the special premiere showing of "STAR WARS: The Empire Strikes Back."

You and up to four members of your immediate family will be there when it all happens if you are winners of the new STAR WARS Sweepstakes, sponsored by Kenner Products. There will be five first-place winners and over 1,000 second and third prizes.

First-place prizes include an all-expense paid trip to Washington for the May 18 premiere of the new STAR WARS film, educational tours of the city, plus $500 in spending money and one of every STAR WARS toy from Kenner's 1980 line.

Leading off the new line are ten action figures, which will be available this spring. These include: a Rebel soldier in Hoth planet gear; Han Solo in a Hoth planet outfit; Luke Skywalker in Bespin fatigues; Princess Leia in a Bespin gown; Bossk, the alien bounty hunter; Lando Calrissian, the leader of Cloud City's Bespin mining colony; FX-7, the medical droid; and Imperial Stormtrooper; IG-88, a bounty hunter; and a member of the Bespin Security Force.

A Darth Vader Collector's Case with space for 31 STAR WARS action figures will also be premiered. A Star Destroyer playset, a Hoth Ice Planet Adventure Set, and an Imperial Attack Base, will allow children to recreate some of the exciting scenes from the movie.

Sweepstakes winners will "rocket" to Washington for the premiere of "STAR WARS: The Empire Strikes Back."

Three vehicles will be unveiled — a Twin-Pod Ship, the spaceship used by the Cloud City Security Force; a Snowspeeder, a replica of the one used by the Rebel Forces to defend their secret Ice Planet base; and a Tauntaun, the native Hoth Planet snow creature used by Rebel troops as transportation.

Other new "STAR WARS: The Empire Strikes Back" products include: a 15 inch Philutdroid action figure; and "The Force" Lightsaber, with unique light, sound and balancing features. Kenner will also introduce the Die Cast Series III assortment, which features a Snowspeeder, a Twin-Pod Ship, and Boba Fett's ship, Slave I.

Winners will be chosen by random drawing. No purchase is necessary to win. Entry blanks will be published in the comic sections of March 2 newspapers and will be available at all STAR WARS toys shelf displays.

Do Your Own Thing

APPLESAUCE PUDDING CAKE

If your family is fussy about some ingredients, nuts and spices for instance, here's a recipe that lets you do your own thing. Instead of starting from scratch, it starts with one of the new pudding cake mixes so it's called Applesauce Pudding Cake. Directions on the package advise adding eggs, water and oil to the mix. When applesauce is used you don't have to add water or oil as the sauce furnishes liquid as well as flavor.

The recipe below makes a plain applesauce cake—no spices, no nuts, no raisins. But if you want to add what your family favors, note suggested amounts in the variations at the end of the recipe. The recipe calls for a 15 oz. jar of applesauce. Either smooth or chunky styles may be used.

APPLESAUCE PUDDING CAKE

1 package (18-1/2 oz.) Pudding Cake Mix
1-2/3 cups applesauce (15 oz. jar)
3 eggs

Heat oven to 350°F. Grease and flour a 12-cup bundt or 10-inch tube pan. In a large bowl, blend applesauce, cakemix and eggs until moistened. Beat 2 minutes at high speed. Transfer the batter to a prepared pan. Bake at 350°F. for 35 to 40 minutes, or until a pick inserted in center comes out clean. Cool upright in pan about 20 minutes, then turn onto serving plate and cool completely. You may dust with powdered sugar or frost. 16 servings.

Variations:
1/2 cup raisins
1/2 cup chopped walnuts
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon nutmeg
1/4 teaspoon cloves

QUICK QUIZ

How much do you know about the form-fitting stockings and hosiery most people take for granted? This quiz can help you tell:

1. The first man said to have worn silk knitted hosiery was (a) Rodrigo Diaz de Vival (El Cid) (b) Henry VIII of England (c) Henry II of France?

2. The first man-made hosiery fiber was (a) nylon (b) artificial silk (c) rayon?

3. The sheerest hosiery made today has fibers measuring (a) 6 denier (b) 9 denier (c) 12 denier?

ANSWERS: 1. (c) Henry II is given credit for wearing the first silk stockings knitted to fit. In the next century, Elizabeth I of England set a trend by wearing black silk stockings. 2. (b) As early as 1883, a form of cellulose-based artificial silk was produced experimentally at Newcastle, England. Two years later in France a similar method was patented by Comte Hilaire de Chardonnet, who built the first factory for its manufacture, but his fiber was inadequate for woven goods. Finally, in 1910, a rayon factory in Germany produced the first stockings from a synthetic fiber. 3. (b) 12 denier is considered quite sheer, but stockings of only 9 denier were exhibited in London in 1966.

'U'M Regents Approve 7% Tuition Hike

Average seven per cent increase in tuition for the University of Minnesota five-campus system was approved recently by the board of regents.

Tuition increase will mean that students in the college of liberal arts (CLA) on the Twin Cities campus, the largest group of students affected, will pay $19 more per quarter beginning next fall.

Tuition rates vary from unit to unit within the five-campus system and are tied roughly to the cost of educating a student in each unit. Students pay about a fourth of the total cost of their education.

Tuition at Crookston and Waseca will rise from $268 a quarter to $288 a quarter. For students on the Morris campus and CLA students on the Twin Cities campus, tuition will rise from $290 a quarter to $309. Tuition rates at Duluth will vary from $328 to $340, depending on the unit.

University president C. Peter Magrath told the regents that the tuition increase was kept as low as possible in part to comply with a legislative request. "Seven per cent is well under the inflation rate," Magrath said. "We are keeping the faith (with the legislature) while trying to maintain our position."

Regents also passed resolutions sounding their "alarm" at the effect inflation is having on faculty salaries and authorizing members of the central administration to seek an "emergency" salary increase for faculty members during this legislative session.

The emergency salary increase resolution passed 8 to 2. "I am uncomfortable with going to the legislature at this time of the year," said West Concord regent Charles Casey, one of the dissenting voters.

"They're going to have to do it for everybody if they do it for us."

"I don't think we're going to get anywhere with this, and I think we're going to generate some negative response," said Madison Lake regent Lauris Krenik, who also voted against the motion.

Minneapolis regent David Lebedoff disagreed, and said requests for necessities must be made whether or not the requests might be met with disapproval.

"We have a duty to state our needs when we think they are urgent, regardless of what we think our reception will be or what our chances are of getting them passed," Lebedoff said.

Faculty salaries have fallen far behind double-digit inflation, and top faculty members may be lured away to other schools or even other occupations as a result, Magrath told the board.

There have been several examples of faculty members moving to higher paid positions at other colleges and universities, Magrath said, but the most serious problem is the flight from higher education to business and industry.

"There is a fundamental crisis in higher education all over the country. We're losing our best people to other occupations," Magrath said.

The key mission of a university is to bring students together with top-flight faculty people, said Lakeland regent Neil Sherburne, and if the best teachers leave for higher pay the mission of a university suffers.

"The situation is going to get worse as the years go by," Lebedoff said. "That may mean fewer buildings. We're going to have to begin showing the legislature our priorities through what we ask for.

"One of these days we're going to have to decide between bricks and brains, and I say we ought to come down on the side of brains," he said.

Magrath also gave the regents a progress report on the study of Williams arena that is currently under way. The study will specify options for keeping open the building, which is home for many Gopher sports, and will provide cost estimates. That report is expected April 23, he said.

NEWS OF SPORTS

PUTTING SOME PUNCH INTO CHARITY

It was a page right out of boxing history—Tony Zale and Rocky Graziano, two of the greatest names in the sport, back in the ring again after 30 years.

Mrs. Georgiana Bronfman weighs in Tony Zale and Rocky Graziano for a benefit return match.

There was no middleweight title at stake this time, as there had been in 1946-47, when they fought three savage battles for the world championship. This time, Zale and Graziano were trading punches for charity. Their exhibition bout at a black-tie dinner-dance in New York City helped raise money for the Gaucho Basketball Fund, Inc., which is building a million-dollar recreational center for the youngsters of Harlem and the South Bronx.

The nostalgic rematch was preceded by an official "weigh-in," with Mrs. Georgiana Bronfman, head of the Gaucho Fund and wife of the chairman of the Seagram Company, Ltd., checking the scales. She pronounced both men only a few pounds over their old fighting weight.

The decision? A draw, naturally.

THE VOICE of BUSINESS

by Richard L. Lesher, President
U.S. Chamber of Commerce

In 1976, while campaigning for the presidency, Jimmy Carter was asked what his economic priorities would be. In a startling and most revealing response he said: "(I'd). . .take my chances with inflation if I had to." He did! Today, four years later, the rate of inflation has nearly tripled, and the latest Consumer Price Index shows inflation rising at an annual rate of 18 per cent.

Mr. Carter admits this disastrous situation has reached the "crisis stage." But he claims: "The basic policies that we have espoused suit me fine." Rather than get involved in any second-guessing, let me simply present Mr. Carter's own arguments, followed by what most economists agree are the facts. Then you be the judge.

Mr. Carter on inflation: "This is a world-wide, awful basic problem," due largely to skyrocketing oil prices. The U.S. is "caught up in circumstances over which we have very little control."

Item: The U.S. imports less than half its oil, with, as noted, a rate of inflation currently increasing at an 18 per cent clip. But West Germany and Japan, which must import nearly 100 per cent of their oil, both have inflation rates of less than 7 per cent. Switzerland, which imports all its oil, actually saw its January inflation rate drop from 5.2 to 5.1 per cent.

Mr. Carter on spending: "We have had a tightly restrained budget," and ". . .there is no waste in it that we could possibly eliminate."

Item: Federal spending during the last three fiscal years has shot up by 40 per cent; it will increase this fiscal year by nearly 15 per cent, a rate exceeded only once, (1967), in the past 25 years.

The President's proposed budget for fiscal 1981 shows an increase in federal spending of 16 per cent from his originally proposed 1980 budget of $532 billion. Joseph Pechman, a respected liberal economist from the Brookings Institute, labels it "fiscally irresponsible." A top official from the Congressional Budget Office finds "very little evidence" of any constraint.

Item: A recent report by the General Accounting Office concludes total dollar losses from fraud and abuse could go as high as 10 per cent of all programs — i.e. approximately $50 billion. GAO even admits: "Opportunity for defrauding the government is virtually limitless."

Mr. Carter on the size of the federal bureaucracy: ". . .we have lowered the number of federal employees has increased by 58,000.

Mr. Carter on the deficit: "We have slashed the deficit down substantially."

Item: Mr. Carter's estimate excludes federal borrowings which are officially classified "off-budget," but which are still directly financed by the Treasury. It includes assumed budget reductions that are nonexistent. In reality, economists believe the deficits for fiscal 1980 and 1981 could be at least $35 billion higher than the Administration publicly admits. Significantly, these high deficits have been occurring in a period of peace, relative prosperity and high employment — a time when, historically, budgets should be in surplus, or at least in balance.

Mr. Carter on taxes: "We've been successful in reducing income taxes since I've been in office."

Item: Tax receipts in 1979 increased by approximately $400 per return. Overall, individual income taxes during the past three years increased at one of the fastest rates in post-war history. Since 1977, receipts from personal income taxes have jumped over 50 per cent — a rate of increase far exceeding that of either wages or prices.

Item: In other areas, Social Security and oil excise taxes, Mr. Carter has proposed and won approval for bigger tax increases than any President in peacetime history. He has opposed efforts to: Reduce individual tax rates, index tax rates, reduce taxes on savings, reduce taxes on investment, reduce taxes on capital gains and reduce inheritance taxes on family businesses.

So, it would seem that there is either an inability or an unwillingness of the President and his advisors to understand inflation. The President has been fed bad policy and false rhetoric. It now appears that Congress is going to try to come to grips with the real source of inflation — federal spending — with or without participation by this administration. If this happens, consumers, taxpayers, labor and business will all benefit.

When I recently appeared before the House Committee on the Budget to testify on the Administration's proposed fiscal 1981 budget, I looked at those distinguished legislators and said:

"If physicians went on strike and refused to heal the sick, allowing thousands to die from simple illness, there would be massive rebellion. Well, members of the Committee, I respectfully suggest to you that a massive rebellion is already underway and growing daily — a rebellion against runaway bureaucracy, spending, inflation and taxes. Millions of Americans are appalled that Washington will not provide the leadership and the medicine that is needed, in spite of the fact that many of the answers are so obvious."

If my message seemed blunt, even alarming, it was meant to be. I am convinced we are now in the most critical economic, financial emergency this nation has faced since the Great Depression. Failure to take comprehensive, corrective action in the near future could bring about consequences which would rival the 1930's in lost jobs and economic hardship for millions of Americans.

Quite frankly, time has run out. There are no easy answers left. For 35 years, our government has been wandering through an intellectual wasteland, mindlessly pursuing pump-priming policies while trying to fine tune economic stabilization and inflation.

The current Administration has championed these ruinous ideas with such a vengeance that the nation now faces a truly awful predicament — soaring levels of inflation, taxation and regulation actually occurring in tandem with plunging rates of savings, investment and productivity. Small wonder that a growing consensus led by the Joint Economic Committee, business, the academic community, the world financial community and even certain members of the press, believes these demand-oriented policies should be relegated to the scrap heap.

We need an immediate, sharp change to signal the world our government can and will reduce inflation, reduce tax and regulatory impediments on business, restore rapid growth in productivity and create a business environment in which market incentives to work, save and invest will be restored.

The U.S. Chamber specifically proposes to: Reject all controls on wages, prices and credit; cut federal spending in fiscal 1981 to 21 per cent of GNP; enact a spending limitation to cut spending even further in future years; cut federal taxes by $25 billion in 1980 by cutting corporate rates, reducing the tax bias against capital formation, and reducing the tax bias against individual savers and investors; limit personal and corporate tax rates still further in future years; place an immediate freeze on federal hiring retroactive to March 1, 1980; freeze regulatory budgets; freeze new regulations except those deemed absolutely necessary under the law, and move toward a balanced budget over the course of the business cycle.

Our proposals are based upon one simple, but undeniable reality: Washington's near exclusive preference for pumping up the economy with more spending, with more demand for goods and services, has severely impaired the ability of the economy to supply them. Thus, it is not enough to merely discourage consumption and deficits; we must also stimulate supply and production by reducing tax and regulatory burdens. The Administration is to be congratulated for its belated recognition that spending must be cut. Unfortunately, it still has no understanding of "supply-side" economics; it remains wedded to the old-fashioned belief that tax cuts are inflationary and increase the deficit.

But not all tax cuts are created equal. A supply-side tax rate cut that rewards additional production relative to additional leisure, and that rewards additional saving relative to additional consumption will increase productivity, which in turn, will help lower prices. What's more, history clearly shows that such supply-side tax rate reductions have stimulated production to the point of generating greater than expected tax revenues, thereby decreasing projected deficits.

Finally, it is time the Administration squared with the American people and informed them of the staggering tax increases it has planned. As Congressman Jack Kemp has observed: ". . .when tax rates are not cut, they rise. Our outdated tax code was designed for an economy without inflation. While devaluing the dollar over the past 12 years, our government has also shoved individuals into ever higher tax brackets, overstated taxable profits by about half and taxed phantom capital gains. On top of that, Congress has already enacted 10 more years of payroll tax increases and is about to pass a huge new excise tax on oil. . ." How will such enormous transfers and probable waste of the nation's precious capital translate into an effective anti-inflation program?

To date, the Administration has refused to treat inflation with supply-side cures. Thus, one regrettably concludes that after all has been said and done, much more has been said than done.

Hints For Homeowners

DECORATE TO SAVE ENERGY AND DOLLARS

By Dave Farrar
National Home Furnishings Coordinator
Montgomery Ward

Energy-saving products and ideas for your home can be fashionable and attractive.

Draperies, for example, can provide a major focal point for a room, but since windows contribute up to 35 percent of a typical home's heating loss, window coverings should have a thermal lining.

Draperies are the perfect window treatment for many of today's popular Romantic and casual looks. They can be combined with casements or sheers, hung from wood or brass rods, or paired with custom window shades or thin, slat blinds for a unique design look.

To give a smaller window a dramatic effect, try laminated fabric shades. A reverse roll-up shade, for instance, is clean, uncluttered and modern. Tight-fitting with an upholstered frame, it helps block drafts, acting as an insulator for the room. The shade can be lowered to let in sunlight while still providing privacy and pizzazz.

Another practical suggestion: cover windows with a quilted material. Simply apply Velcro to both the quilting edge and the window frame, or a 1"x2" constructed frame. Velcro allows a tight seal and at the same time permits easy material removal for cleaning.

Quilted material should be slit about three-quarters of the way up, then two or three small ties affixed. This lets you open the window covering during the day for a dramatic, tentlike effect. At night the flap can be closed and tied to provide privacy and help keep out the cold.

Quilted fabric at a window insulates by trapping cold air between layers of material and batting while it makes a dramatic decorating statement.

To add a dramatic touch to a room while keeping an eye on energy conservation, apply fabric to a wall. It can be as easy as hanging wallpaper and is ideal for damaged walls, or on an outside wall, as another way to reduce conduction and drafts.

A handsome print or stripe can add size to a small room while making a dramatic statement, and it adds an acoustical dimension as well. Such conservation factors may influence the way we design our homes in the 1980s.

Their son and daughter-in-law and family, Chester and Marla Yonke, Jason, Scott and Steven, visited them at their home in the evening to help them celebrate. West Steiner Homemakers
Have Low Calorie Meal

Evi Halvorson, Violet Muzzy, Irene Rausch, Rebecca Solem, Shirley Yonke and Ethel and Evonne Moe enjoyed a low calorie noon dinner at the Eldon Moe home Wednesday, March 19. Following the meal a business meeting was held. The "Spring Thing" will be held at the Silver Creek Lutheran church at 8 p.m. Friday, April 11. Guest speaker will be Joann Bremmer from Lutheran Social Services of Moorhead. Her topic will be the family. The Back Behind The Barn boys from the Gatzke-Grygla area will furnish the entertainment. Lunch will be served following the program. Each club is asked to bring crafts for individual tables.

The Rebekah circle of Trinity Lutheran church of which Mrs. Leonard Yonke and Mrs. Alfred Solem are members served lunch before the services conducted by Pastor Julius Hovland at the Valley Home Wednesday afternoon. An added feature of the services were duet numbers by Mrs. Grace Jorde and Mrs. Carmen Gustafson.

Many from our area attended funeral services for Vernon Malberg at the Redeemer Lutheran church in Thief River Falls Friday afternoon, March 21. Honorary pallbearers were Raymond Rausch, Alfred Solem, Melvin Saugen, Olaf Jorde, Louis Meyer and Alfred Stroberg. Active pallbearers were Lester, Kenneth, Erwin and James Muzzy and Kermit and Michael Malberg. There are some who give of their time and talent and willingly serve to make their a community a better place to live. One of those was Vernon. In his quiet way he did his good deeds, always willing to promote any good cause. When the Steiner community club was trying to find a suitable location to build its new hall, Vernon consented that it be built on his farm. He did much to plant trees and help maintain the area surrounding the hall. He would never accept payment for what he did. On the farm where he lived most of his married life are many kinds of trees and shrubs which he planted. He loved the outdoors and nature. Hunting and fishing in season were his favorite pasttimes. He will long be missed.

Cooperation Key To Mainstreaming

by Jeanne Hanson
'U' M News Service

His special education teacher led him into the regular classroom for math, and Brian was getting very nervous. Would the other kids make fun of his handicap? Would they ignore him? How could he ever fit in?

Two professors from the University of Minnesota think they have the research and a plan to help Brian (not his real name) and other handicapped students, now estimated at eight to 12 per cent of the school population. Under federal law, these students must be "mainstreamed" or integrated to some degree with nonhandicapped students.

The method should work just as well with "the quiet student sitting by the window, the bright kid in the front row, the disruptive child in the back, and the responsible 'average' ones in the middle of the room," said Roger Johnson, professor of curriculum and instruction at the University of Minnesota.

He and his brother David Johnson, professor of educational psychology at the university, are now in the second year of a grant from the U.S. office of education to train 18 school districts across the country to use the method they developed and tested years ago, before mainstreaming became an issue. It is now being used in the interracial classrooms of Webster Magnet school in St. Paul.

The method — cooperation — sounds almost too simple. But, if it is carefully set up by the teacher, it works well, according to research by the Johnsons and others. Brian, for example, is a real success story. He was assigned to record math answers for a small work group, all "normal" students, and contributed to their success. Within five weeks of joining the class, he told his teacher, "This is the most fun I've ever had in school."

Handicapped kids, sometimes first thought of by the other kids as "cripples" or "retards," end up being chosen just as often for group work, Johnson said. Other kids begin to think of them as "Carl-who-has-a-gerbil-at-home-like-I-do," instead of just as someone who is different. Even in cases where the student is not liked, the others can learn to work reasonably well with him or her, Johnson said.

Here's how it works. Teacher assigns students to small groups and sets a goal for each group. (Later, students may do this themselves.) A group goal could be to do a short biography of Abraham Lincoln or to figure out answers to math problems. Within this framework, a subgoal may be set for the handicapped student, if necessary, perhaps with the advice of the special education teacher, Johnson said. This student could summarize the results or collect the reference books or some such task.

Key point, Johnson said, is that everyone's grade depends on the group effort. It could be a joint score, an average of individual spelling scores, a series of individual chapters in a final report, or whatever.

"Students have to be taught how to work together, though," Johnson said. "Just putting people side by side without a definite structure for cooperation can actually increase prejudice against handicapped students, blacks or any group that people sometimes stereotype. Students can be shown how to criticize an action rather than a person, how to praise others for work well done. Group pressures and support typically make the lazier students work harder. And individual subgoals can be used to increase individual responsibility if necessary. The teacher must also act as a consultant to all the groups."

Research studies show that the cooperative method enhances the self-esteem of students, increases their social skills, deepens friendships between handicapped and other students, and maximizes the achievement of all students, Johnson said. Students enjoy helping one another, so they learn more. And peer pressure is directed toward success and achievement.

Cooperative groups are easier for teachers too, Johnson said. This is especially important since "'mainstreaming' has gotten to be a bad word" among some teachers, he said. Teachers don't have to experience more stress and other children don't need to suffer as a result of mainstreaming. Neither do handicapped kids have to be stashed in the back of the room, just doing worksheets from the special education teacher, according to Johnson.

Not every classroom activity must be cooperative, though, Johnson said. Competition and individualized instruction are still useful. But competition, the most common classroom pattern, is overemphasized, he said. It creates students who are motivated more by winning than by learning. It should be reserved for activities where all students have a chance to win, where they know their progress (as in a baseball game), and where the rules are specific.

Individualized approach, where students work on their own projects at their own pace, doesn't build social skills but can sometimes be good for self-motivation, Johnson said.

The President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped is made up of more than 600 organizations and individuals representing a cross-section of American business, labor, professions, mass media, veterans, women, youth, consumers, and many others.

- 1 medium banana
- 2 cups sweetened whipped cream or whipped topping

1. Preheat oven to 350° F. Grease and flour two 8-inch layer-cake pans. In small bowl, combine flour, bran, baking powder and salt.
2. In large bowl of electric mixer, beat butter or margarine, cream cheese and sugar until fluffy. Blend in egg, lemon juice and rind. Beat in flour mixture.
3. Divide batter evenly between two pans. Bake 20 to 25 minutes until edge of cake pulls away slightly from side of pan. Cool in pan on wire rack 10 minutes. Loosen edges and turn out to cool completely.
4. Cut banana into 14 slices and reserve 10 peach slices for top layer of cake. Thinly dice remaining peaches. Spread 1 cup whipped cream or whipped topping on one layer; arrange sliced peaches over whipped cream. Top with second layer; spread remaining whipped cream and top with reserved fruit slices. Makes 8 (3-inch) wedges.

Counseling For Cult-Involved Families Ready

A counseling service for persons concerned about the activity of "cults" in Minnesota and their effect on young people has been established through the cooperation of the United Methodist church and the department of pastoral care at Methodist hospital in St. Louis Park.

In response to a number of persons who asked him for guidance, Bishop Wayne K. Clymer requested Rev. Edward J. Holland learn about cults and the needs of those who had young people involved in such groups. Rev. Holland, who is senior chaplain resident in the clinical pastoral care program at Methodist hospital, began a study of such groups in 1978, talking with those who had a young person involved with a cult and others who were knowledgable about their activities. He also became familiar with Free Minds, Inc., an organization of parents and others who have a family member involved with a cult.

Out of this study it was determined that a pastoral counseling service was needed. The service, which will be provided under the superivision of Rev. Walter W. Pitt, director of pastoral care at the hospital, will be three-fold.

Primarily, the hospital chaplains will counsel with parents, family members, persons in cults and those who were struggling with the choice of involvement in or leaving such a group.

Secondly, it is hoped the pastoral care office will become a referral resource for clergy who have persons in their congregations coming to them for assistance in this area.

Third aspect of the service will be to act as a referral agent to local support groups such as Free Minds and to offer, with these groups, educational programs for churches and other organizations.

"I want to make clear," Rev. Holland said, "we are not advocating anything, but we are providing help for persons to clarify in their own minds what they want to do." The people he sees, he emphasized, "are dealing with a very difficult situation in their lives. Sometimes they need help in understanding. They are often angry, confused and sometimes feel helplessness, guilt and sense of failure. We want to make ourselves available to them."

Rev. Holland said it is difficult to estimate how many people are involved with cults in this state because the groups usually do not publish membership figures. However, Free Minds," he said, lists 12 groups working within Minnesota which they define as "cults."

Engineer Adds Support For Highway Funds

If Minnesota county highway budgets don't get an increase from the state's highway user fund, there will have to be another increase in property taxes if basic maintenance needs are to be met.

That was the message from Pat Murphy, president of the Minnesota county engineers association and director of public works for Carver county, and from Ken Paulson, legislative committee chairman for MCEA and Morrison county highway engineer.

Murphy and Paulson's remarks were made at an informational meeting for representatives of more than 35 Minnesota associations, hosted by Minnesota Good Roads, Inc. (MGRI) on Wednesday, February 6, in St. Paul.

"The problem is that there's a limit to how much we can increase property taxes," said Murphy. "What's more, a property tax isn't as fair a source of road dollars as a gasoline tax, which is a user fee."

Initial findings in a recent survey of county engineers indicate that counties in Minnesota raised property taxes approximately equivalent to a 2 to 3 cent per gallon increase in the gasoline tax, during fiscal 1979.

Paulson said, "County boards have faced the issue and raised property taxes in order to protect their road investment. "We're hoping the legislature will take its cue from the counties and provide increased dollars to the highway user fund during this session of the legislature."

"We should be talking about raising road restrictions — bringing those 5 and 6 ton roads up to 7 — but the reality is that we're declassifying them because we can't afford the maintenance resulting from wear and tear of heavier loads," said Murphy. "And we're still talking about letting some roads revert to gravel, which would create a real hardship — especially for farmers."

Senator Roger Laufenberger (DFL, Lewiston) told the group that he hopes to see legislation passed which will take into account the long-range road funding needs. "Whatever happens in this session, it won't help the immediate problems," said Laufenberger, referring to MN-DOT's deferral of 61 projects in 1979 and possible postponement of additional projects in 1980.

Transportation Commissioner Dick Braun outlined the Governor's proposal for funding roads, which includes a four per cent sales tax on gasoline and gradual phasing in of the four per cent tax from sales of cars and trucks from the general fund to the highway user fund.

MGRI legislative chairman Robert McFarlin pointed out that no one paid much attention to those who predicted the demise of the railroads a decade ago, "and look at the trouble they're in now."

Minnesota Good Roads is an association of 1,500 concerned citizens working together to insure adequate funding to maintain the quality of Minnesota's road system.

DENTAL IMPLANTS

Dental implantology (inserting a post into the jawbone to act as an anchor for dentures) goes back to the times of the early Egyptians. Mummies and skeletons have been examined, and they indicate that dental implants were attempted even in those days.

A dental implant is a device that supports a single crown, a bridge, or a full denture, when the gums cannot normally retain them. There are two types: One has a metal framework that rests on the jawbone, with the gum tissue closed over it; The other is placed into the bone, like a root of a tooth. Both types have a post or series of posts which protrude through the gum to serve as an anchor.

While implant dentistry is quite complex - and still considered experimental and practiced only by a relatively few experts - it does provide a new approach to denture problems.

Varying degrees of success are reported, but it appears that the percentage of successful cases is directly related to the amount of training and experience of the implantologist.

Summer Youth Job Programs Start June 16

Inter-County community council, Inc., announces that its two summer youth programs, the summer youth employment program (SYEP), and the governor's youth program (GYP), will begin June 16.

Total monetary allocation for the SYEP program will be $512,575 for the seven-county Region I area (counties of Polk, Pennington, Red Lake, Norman, Marshall, Kittson and Roseau). Allocation figures for the governor's youth program have not yet been received.

Both programs will begin June 16 and run for eight weeks. All participants must be 14-21 years of age (inclusive). Participants 14-17 years of age may work a maximum of 32 hours per week. Some youths who are 18 or those who have graduated from high school may be allowed to work a maximum of 40 hours per week. Hours will be determined prior to the start of the programs and will remain the same for the duration of the programs.

Participants will receive the federal minimum wage of $3.10 per hour. Participants in the federal program, SYEP, must be economically disadvantaged and meet the established income criteria.

Participants in the state program, GYP, need not necessarily be economically disadvantaged. Fifty per cent of the total enrollment must be economically disadvantaged and meet the established income criteria, but the remaining 50 per cent need not meet any income criteria. All worksites must be public or private non-profit organizations.

Applications are now available at the Inter-County community council, high

"CLEAN WATER, WHO NEEDS IT?" was the title of the speeches given Saturday by area contestants during the area soil conservation speech contest conducted in the Thief River Falls city auditorium. Winners in the senior division (sophomores through seniors) included Karen Kjensrud, first place, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Kjensrud of Newfolden, and Mark Hanson, Trail, second place. Winners in the competition will now advance to the state competition in St. Cloud in May. Judges for the contest included Beattie Mickelson, crossing guard at Lincoln high school, Ed Sisler, farm management director, and Ward Aas, soil scientist at the Soil Conservation Service in Thief River Falls.

Census Teams Look For Those Without Address

Census teams will fan out the night of March 31 searching for people in this area who have no fixed address, Carole Wilson manager of the 1980 census office for this area, said.

Crew leaders will take their teams into charity-type missions, all-night theaters, hotels, bus stations, parks, campsites, motor-home overnight parks, and other places where "floaters" are likely to be found. This is in an effort to see that no one is missed in the 1980 census of population and housing.

"It's essential to find everybody," Wilson said. "Fixed address or not, everybody counts in our society. It is especially important to find everyone who may be in trouble. We have to know what kinds of problems the people face in each area. Our society makes substantial sacrifices to help those who need help of one kind or another. It would be tragic if we couldn't direct that help to those areas that most need it.

"And no one has anything to fear by answering the census questions, because the Census Bureau does not divulge information about a particular individual, family, or household. We're the nation's fact-finder, but the only facts we reveal are totals, averages, percentages, and trends, figures in which no one can be identified."

Those persons with no fixed address are counted as part of the population of the place where they are found.

Census takers for the 1980 Census of population and housing are easy to identify, according to Wilson.

They wear a red, white and blue ID card with the U.S. Department of Commerce seal and the words, "Census Enumerator, Official Credential," printed on its face. Their cards also have their signatures, certifying that they have sworn to keep confidential all information they collect for the census. Any Census Bureau worker who breaks this oath faces a stiff fine or imprisonment or both, but the bureau's record on this is spotless, Wilson said.

Census enumerators started making their rounds March 31

School Closes Friday Only

Because of make-up days necessary due to school closing for winter storms earlier this year, only Friday, April 4, will be a school vacation day during the Easter period, according to Dr. William Corliss, superintendent of schools.

Twin Elm Farm Donates State Award Dairy Calf

Twin Elm farm operated by Mrs. Richard (Alta) Peterson and sons William and Lowell has donated a purebred Milking Shorthorn heifer calf to the Minnesota Milking Shorthorn association for presentation to the winner of the youth contests conducted by the association each year.

The Plummer dairymen made the contribution as members of the state association. The calf, named "Twin Elm Helen the Third", was given to Sarah Jacobson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Gerald Jacobson of Clarissa. Dr. Jacobson is a veterinarian. Sarah, 15 years old and a five-year 4-H club member, has shown cattle at the Todd county fair, regional dairy day and the Minnesota state fair. She has three brothers, Robert, Andrew and Ross.

The Peterson Twin Elm farm is located north of Plummer. Lowell and William Peterson showed cattle at the original Northwest dairy a day in Thief River Falls as 4-H club members and Lowell holds the record for 12 years of dairy day showmanship, starting during his first club year in 1950 and continuing until 1961.

Mrs. Alta Peterson served as an adult leader in the Happy Go Lucky 4-H club in Red Lake county for more than 20 years and William, who is not married, has more than 20 years of service as an adult leader in the club and is still serving. Among Peterson family members there is nearly 100 years of 4-H club involvement as members and leaders.

William Peterson won the Red Lake county 4-H alumni award two years ago and was one of the few from this area to win the award on the state level. Only four state alumni awards are presented each year.

The Petersons have had registered Milking Shorthorn cattle in their herd for more than 45 years and the 70-animal herd is now nearly all registered. There are 27 cows milking at the present time and the herd is tested by the Red Lake county dairy herd improvement association. An aged bull on the Peterson farm is now ranked among the top bulls in the nation.

Minnesota Milking Shorthorn association conducts the youth contests throughout the year with one winner receiving a purebred heifer calf. In prior years Richard and Randy Ayers of rural Thief River Falls and Greg and Dan Hallstrom of rural Red Lake Falls have won calves through the program. Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Hallstrom are members of the state youth awards committee for the Minnesota association.

Management Of Old Mill State Park Outlined

Proposed management plan for Old Mill state park has been completed by the department of natural resources and copies are available for review at several locations in northwestern Minnesota.

The Park is located between Argyle and Newfolden in Marshall county. Copies of the management plan can be found at the following locations: Godell Memorial library, Warren; northwest regional library, Thief River Falls; Marshall County state bank, Newfolden; Argyle city office; Stephen city clerk's office; Old Mill state park office; and DNR regional headquarters in Bemidji.

Written comment on the plan should be sent to Dennis Thompson, Park Planning, DNR, Box 10E in the Argyle city conference room starting at 7:30 p.m.

JUNIOR DIVISION WINNERS (seventh through ninth grades) in the area soil conservation speech contest conducted Saturday in the Thief River Falls city auditorium were Ruth Boman (left), Trail, second place, and Cindy Solem, first place, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roger Solem of Thief River Falls. Sixteen students competed in the contest, with first place winners receiving $20, and second place winners awarded $10. All winners will now advance to the state speech contest in St. Cloud in May.

Arctic Sells Company Metal Works Facility

Kenneth J. Severinson, president of Arctic Enterprises, Inc. (AEI), has announced sale of the company's metal working facility located in Brooklyn Center to Federal Cartridge corporation, Minneapolis, for its Hoffman engineering division.

In January Arctic announced to employees its plans to close the facility. "We could not continue to justify the substantial investment and financial commitment required to support this facility with the year-to-year fluctuations in production levels which are experienced in the snowmobile industry, Severinson said." This sale is part of our current streamlining efforts which are designed to more closely align our current facilities to our current business operation."

"While the sale of Arctic metal products facility may result in a slight increase in product costs, it will significantly increase the company's financial flexibility to respond to challenges ahead," Severinson added.

Fire Education Meet Tonight

Public fire education workshop will be conducted at the Thief River Falls AVTI this evening at 7:30. Public is welcome to attend.

Chisanbop — It's Not A New Dance Form

by Marvin Lundin
Times Editor

Remember when using the fingers for counting was considered an elementary method of using numbers? Well, forget it. Chisanbop is here — a finger calculation method which can outcalculate a calculator in certain situations and is a point of high interest in mathematics instruction.

Interest in the system was illustrated during the in-service program held at Lincoln high school last Monday for teachers in schools throughout the Thief River Falls area. Approximately 50 teachers crowded into the classroom where Heather Hill, one of four accredited instructors in the province of Manitoba, explained and demonstrated Chisanbop methods.

Chisanbop was developed by a Korean named Hang Young Pai and, translated from Korean, means finger calculation method. It is a procedure which anyone — adult or child — can master with proper practice, diligence and time.

"It uses all the senses, reaches all grade and ability levels and can be introduced at any grade level," Hill explained in an interview following her presentation. She said the interest and curiosity shown here is typical of workshop sessions which she presents. In the past two years she has put on approximately 20 courses in Chisanbop.

"Youngsters enjoy it," she said, indicating plus factors of the method. "They have to understand the concept of numbers and it increases the student's ability to calculate for speed and accuracy. It is based on the decimal system and students can have all the knowledge basic to the program by second grade in school."

Hill teaches fifth and sixth grade health at R. J. Waugh school in Carberry, Manitoba, as well as serving as instructor in special education. She uses the Chisanbop method in teaching her special education classes and finds it works well for her.

"The earlier one becomes exposed, the more rapidly will the knowledge be gained," she stated in an informational paper on the method. "The younger mind, which is 'pure' of previously learned mathematical methods, will adapt most rapidly to Chisanbop. It is for this reason that the creator of the system emphasizes its initiation on the child of pre-school age for optimum results later.

"What is equally important is that the meaning of numbers will be brought home. Chisanbop stimulates an understanding of why a result was achieved," she said. "A brief practice period each day for one month would be enough for most children to achieve a considerable level of comprehension and use. The knowledge of Chisanbop will enlarge a child's understanding of conventional arithmetic presently taught."

Commenting on use of the system in relation to an electronic calculator, she explained that the speed of a calculator is only as rapid as the input of information by the human hand. Further, the calculator can only accept a single digit at a time. The human brain, on the other hand, can take in two or more digits simultaneously. The ultimate meaning of Chisanbop is brain calculation.

Students who have prior experience with mathematics can still use the system, she added. "Pupils well into high school have been taught Chisanbop to improve their computational skill, speed and accuracy and their general ability to perform," she said. "It is especially effective, partly because of its game-like quality, in better involving children who have real learning deficiencies as well as those who tend to wander or misbehave."

Not to be minimized is the fact that Chisanbop is a constant companion to the user. Use of the fingers makes the system applicable to handicapped students, including the blind, whose capability of using colored chips, weights or computers is greatly restricted.

"In no way is Chisanbop at odds with established methods of teaching basic arithmetic," Hill emphasized. "Having a decimal system base, it enhances these methods, enabling the child to perform with extraordinary speed, coupled with superb accuracy. The need for memorizing sums and-or products is eliminated by the ability of the pupil to find his place at all times, both by feeling and seeing his result at any point in a calculation. Because of INSTRUCTOR Heather Hill of R.J. Waugh school in Carberry, Man., Canada, demonstrated the finger calculation method called Chisanbop at the in-service for area school teachers last Monday at Lincoln high school. The day-long session was intended to provide an introduction to the method and stimulate interest in its use by the public and in the classroom.

SOCIETY and CLUBS

Preview Of Film Series Shown At MCCL Meeting

Review of last year's projects was presented at the March meeting of the Minnesota Citizens Concerned for Life (MCCL) held Tuesday at the Easton home.

Twenty members were present including District Director Frances Crummy.

Highlighting the meeting was a preview of the film series "Whatever Happened to the Human Race" by Jeanne Krumplemann. The film showed the growing menace in society of labeling certain persons as non-persons and as such are not entitled to human rights.

It was announced that the film "Infanticide," will be shown at the April 15th meeting of MCCL. Meeting time and place will be announced at a later date. Members were encouraged to publicize the event and were asked to invite the public to attend.

Lunch served by the hostesses featured cake and ice cream. The cakes, decorated in white with blue, were in the baby motif. They were baked and decorated by Mrs. Jeanette Reierson.

Those attending the event, in addition to the honor guests and hostesses, were Jason's grandmother, Mrs. Leonard Waswick, and his aunts, Lynn Waswick and Mrs. Dan Skogen.

Also present were Mrs. Alvin Asp, LuJean and Lorna Skadsem, Gitta Birlev, Mrs. Don Dyrdal, Kathy and Kristy, Mrs. Dunne Vatsaas, Mrs. Bernice Vatsaas, Mrs. Mitch Swanson, Mrs. Marty Olson, Mrs. David Colby, Mrs. David Bach, Mrs. Gladys Hamre and Mrs. Daryl Lewis.

Business Men, Women Face Same Problems

Women make up 50 per cent of the work force, but own only 4.6 per cent of the nation's businesses, according to Paul W. Jansen, district director of the Small Business Administration (SBA).

"It should be remembered that women entrepreneurs encounter the same problems faced by all small business people: lack of adequate capital; lack of management and technical assistance; and lack of significant opportunities to secure government contracts," he said.

The woman business owner also is faced with further barriers imposed by societal attitudes which persist in the business community. No legislation or executive order can reverse those attitudes but government is trying to make capital, management assistance and government contracts more available.

For example, President Carter's new budget calls for several new initiatives to support his women's business enterprise policy. Under the budget proposals, direct loans from the small business administration to women business owners would be increased 50 per cent. A lending program aimed at helping women business owners would increase to $13.6 million in the fiscal year beginning October 1, as compared with $2.5 million in the previous fiscal year.

At SBA, special efforts are underway to direct more federal work to women business owners. SBA also will expand management training, counseling and other support services to small firms owned by women and to women interested in starting their small firms.

SBA also is making special efforts to add the names of 15,000 women-owned businesses to the agency's computerized list of small companies which are capable of performing work on federal contracts.

Women business owners were well represented at the recent White House conference on small business. The delegates recommended that: private lending institutions should be required to provide equal access to commercial credit for women in business. The Federal reserve board should monitor such performance; and SBA should establish targets for banks to increase the dollar volume of loans to women.

It was also recommended that the president should initiate an executive order and congress should enact legislation establishing mandatory goals and reporting requirements for all federal contracts, and that 10 per cent of all government work be targeted for women-owned businesses.

USDA Seeking Summer Food Plan Sponsors

U.S. department of agriculture is seeking sponsors to operate the 1980 summer food program, according to Monroe Woods, Midwest regional administrator for USDA's food and nutrition service.

Woods said, "We would like to see many responses from interested organizations, especially those in rural areas."

Summer food program provides free, nutritious meals to children in needy areas during any school vacation of more than three weeks. In most areas this applies primarily to the summer months of May to September. Eligible to participate are children through the age of 18 and those over the age of 18 who participate in a public or private school program for the handicapped.

Sponsors can be reimbursed up to the full cost of operating the summer food program. They also may be reimbursed for administrative costs related to planning, organizing and supervising the food service.

This year rural sponsors or sponsors preparing meals on site will receive additional administrative money. They also will be allowed to claim travel expenses for transporting children to designated rural sites.

Sponsors may be public or private, nonprofit, nonresidential organizations with feeding locations in areas where at least one-third of the children are eligible for free or reduced price school lunches. Residential summer camps whose enrollment includes needy children also may act as program sponsors.

Sponsors also may include city government agencies, county and municipal school systems, recreation departments, churches and social service organizations. Principal eligibility requirements are as follows:

—Sponsors must operate as nonprofit organizations.

—Sponsors must show evidence of financial and administrative capability for operating program.

—Sponsors must ensure children eat their meals at designated sites. All meals served must meet USDA nutritional guidelines.

Summer food program began in 1969 as a means of encouraging the health and well-being of needy children by continuing during the summer months food assistance they normally would get at school.

Potential sponsors in Michigan and Minnesota are encouraged to contact the Summer Food Program, Midwest regional office, USDA, FNS, 536 S. Clark street, Chicago, Illinois 60605.

"City Of The Bees" To Be Shown At AVTI

To maintain their city, bees tell time, measure distance, solve geometry problems, operate an air-conditioning system and even have a highly developed language all their own.

In the film, "City of the Bees", the viewer is taught to understand this language of the bees. In fact, man is on the verge of being able to get a message through to the bees by "talking" to them in their own language.

This film will be shown at the AVTI on April 7 at 7 p.m., room 114 and is open to the public. There is no charge for the film.

Mono Transmitted In Variety Of Ways

Mono is not only a kissing disease, although that's one way this viral infection is transmitted, say doctors at a St. Paul hospital.

"We're seeing many more cases of infectious mononucleosis in younger age groups," says Paul Kubic, M.D., associate director of the hospital clinic. "Societal change has brought about an earlier exposure to the mono virus."

More children are being grouped with other children at earlier ages than in the past — in day care centers, in preschools and at babysitters.

"The virus particle is very tiny and is found in saliva, nasal discharge and probably most other bodily fluids," Dr. Kubic says. Virus usually is transmitted by direct oral contact. But it's also passed indirectly when kids suck their fingers, or wipe their noses and hold hands with other kids, who in turn put their fingers in their mouths. Virus is similarly transmitted on toys, pop bottles or through saliva expelled in a sneeze or a cough.

In the past, children of lower socioeconomic levels acquired the virus at younger ages then children in the middle class, most likely because of crowded living conditions, according to Dr. Kubic. Many middle and upper class children didn't get mono until they got to college and lived in dormitories or other group living situations.

Mono is an acute viral infection attributed to the Epstein-Barr virus. It gets its name — mononucleosis — from an above-normal concentration of single-core (mononuclear) white cells present in the infected person's blood. A blood test that detects the presence of these white cells, called lymphocytes, confirms a doctor's diagnosis.

Not all people have the same symptoms, but the most frequent complaints include "tiredness, low-grade fever, aching muscles, sore throat, swollen glands, loss of appetite, stomach ache and sore neck," Dr. Kubic says. Other less frequent symptoms are unusual rashes and, occasionally, jaundice.

"The classic case of mono is the little girl who has had a sore throat for two weeks and wants to lay in bed all day," he says.

About 50 per cent of the people with mono get an enlarged spleen, due to the body's reaction to the virus. But in fewer than five cases out of 1,000 the spleen ruptures. Other serious complications include neurological problems, affecting less than one per cent of those with mono; and, even more rarely, death, according to Dr. Kubic.

Incubation period for mono is about 20 to 30 days. The symptoms of mono are usually less severe in young children than in older children or young adults.

The virus usually creeps up, making its victim feel tired, listless and aching for a week or so before it becomes acute, although it sometimes begins abruptly with a high fever. Because the symptoms are sometimes mild, and are similar to those of other infections, many people have had mono by the time they're 30 without even realizing it.

Therefore, by the age of 30 most people have built up immunity to the virus and don't have to worry about catching it from their children, Dr. Kubic says.

Acute phase of mono usually lasts about two weeks and the best treatment is rest and plenty of fluids. Recovery period for mono is usually rapid, although it's not uncommon for some people to be weak or to tire easily for months following the acute stage of the virus. Begin away from school and peers for an extended length of time can have an emotional, but even more so an academic, impact on some children.

Antibiotics are of no use in treatment for mono because they fight bacteria, and mono is caused by a virus. Physicians might, however, prescribe medications for swelling, pain or a concurrent illness.

Patient with an enlarged spleen is usually confined to bed and physical exertion must be kept at a minimum to avoid rupturing the spleen. "Usually within a week or two the child can return to normal play activities when the spleen size has returned to normal," he says.

Isolation of the person with mono isn't necessary; good hygiene practices are sufficient — washing dishes in hot, soapy water, using separate toothbrushes, water glasses, and so on. People who have had mono can be carriers of the virus for a year or more afterwards. Many people who are exposed to the virus don't get mono and, other than good hygiene, there's no known prevention for the disease.

Even though treatment for mono is limited to plenty of rest and patience, it's important to confirm a diagnosis of mono with laboratory tests. "Mono symptoms occasionally can be confused with drug reactions, hepatitis, scarlet fever and other diseases," Dr. Kubic warns. "Lab work is necessary to rule out other conditions (that require more aggressive treatment) and complications," in addition to determining the extent and severity of mono.

Mono infects people year around. "But our experience in the upper midwest is that we see a predominance of cases in the fall and winter. . . when kids are back in school and teen-agers and young adults snuggle more," Dr. Kubic says.

Inside Of Car Important At Trade-In Time

Strange as it may seem, the condition of the interior of a car is more important than the exterior to get top dollar at trade-in time, says the Automotive Information council (AIC).

Two basic reasons for this are: the auto dealer can fix exterior dings and scratches easily, and even refurbish the paint, but a stained, abused interior usually cannot be cleaned properly; and a carelessly kept interior signals that the car owner has neglected proper mechanical maintenance.

"A used-car specialist can look at the interior of a car and give you a good idea of the character of the owner," AIC was told by Sam Lafata, president of Aptco Auto Auction of Taylor, Mich., one of the nation's largest car brokerage firms.

"When we see a car which has filthy carpeting, soft-drink stains on the upholstery, a ripped headliner (ceiling) and things like that, we just know that he hasn't taken a care of the vital parts of the car, such as the brakes, transmission, etc. And the car probably is badly in need of a tune-up.

"Used-car appraisers generally follow the motto: If it's clean inside, buy it."

He urges car owners to vacuum the upholstery and carpeting every few weeks to keep the dirt from getting ground into the fibers. He also recommends floor mats and suggests that spills be wiped up immediately.

Vinyl and leather interiors also should be cleaned and waxed with the type of product specified in the owner's manual.

"Shiny seats. . .we like that," Lafata said.

The car's windows should be left open occasionally to air it out and therefore get rid of lingering odors such as cigarette smoke.

Experience shows that a cared-for car can bring hundreds of dollars more than a neglected vehicle at trade-in time, added AIC.

Survey Shows Adults Approve Grain Embargo

President Carter's Russian grain embargo has met with the approval of a large majority of Minnesota's adults, according to a recent PROBE quarterly poll conducted by a Minneapolis public opinion and marketing research firm. In the same poll, the research firm found that the president's job rating had rebounded to the levels he obtained a few months after he took office in 1977.

Grain embargo, invoked by Carter after Russian troops were sent into Afghanistan, was termed a "wise course of action" by two-thirds of the 1,000 Minnesota adults surveyed in February. The remaining respondents split evenly between "not a wise course of action" and "don't know."

The grain embargo was supported across age groupings and income levels, although the higher the income level, the more likely the respondent was to support the embargo. Seventy-three per cent of metropolitan area adults surveyed supported the embargo, versus 62 per cent of other Minnesotans.

Interviewers asked the following question:

"As you may know, after Russia sent troops into Afghanistan, President Carter took a number of economic steps to withhold American products and technology from Russia. One of the steps was an embargo on grain shipments. In your opinion, was this a wise course of action, or not?"

Wise — Metro area, 73 per cent; others, 62 per cent; overall total, 67 per cent; Not wise — 13 per cent; 19 per cent; 16 per cent; Don't know — 14 per cent; 19 per cent; 16 per cent; number of respondents — 497 in metro area; 504 other Minnesotans; and 1,001 overall total.

Minneapolis survey firm, which has been following Carter's ratings ever since he took the presidential oath in January 1977, noted a steady downturn through August of last year. Third-quarter survey showed a slight improvement in the president's rating, while the February 1980 results were the highest the firm had recorded since May of 1978.

The question was worded the same way each time it was asked:

"All things considered, would you say the job President Carter has been doing is excellent, good, fair, poor or very poor?"

Excellent: May 1978 — 5 per cent; August 1979 — 2 per cent; November 1979 — 2 per cent; February 1980 — 5 per cent; good — 42 per cent; 22 per cent; 27 per cent; and 42 per cent; fair — 33 per cent; 46 per cent; 48 per cent; 40 per cent; poor — 10 per cent; 20 per cent; 14 per cent; 8 per cent; very poor — 2 per cent; 6 per cent; 5 per cent; 2 per cent; don't know — 8 per cent; 4 per cent; 4 per cent; 3 per cent.

Senator Asks Early Release Of FmHA Funds

In an effort to make funds available for the 1980 crop year, Senator Rudy Boschwitz has requested that money for the fourth quarter of fiscal 1980 be released to the Farmers Home administration immediately.

In a letter to office of management and budget director James McIntyre, Boschwitz said "during a recent tour of Minnesota it became apparent to me that the credit crunch is a serious threat to our state's basic economy. Many farmers feel they will not be able to get the operating money to put in their crops this year."

Boschwitz requested that funds allocated for operating loans in the fourth quarter of fiscal 1980 be made available immediately.

"The funds I am requesting," Boschwitz said, "will do little good for our farmers if they are not released until July. Agriculture is a seasonal business and the farmers need loans now to plant their crop," he said.

Boschwitz said "FmHA sources in Minnesota have indicated that money allocated for the third quarter, commencing April 1, will be gone within one week of the quarter. Putting forth the $1,715,000 available to Minnesota for the fourth quarter," he said, "would go a long way toward providing the credit so desperately needed."

Otter Tail To Be Aware Of Life Systems

Customers who are dependent upon life-support systems are receiving special attention from Otter Tail Power company's system operations department, according to Robert M. Bigwood, president of the electric utility company. Locations of these customers are prominently designated on the company's system map for quick reference when the restoration of electric service is being carried out.

Switching considerations may enable the company's dispatchers to reroute electric service first to communities where life-support systems are in operation throughout Otter Tail's service territory in North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota.

In its program Otter Tail has developed a life-support system file that includes customers' names, nature of illnesses and associated support systems. Available data also includes specific community substation and feeder information.

A large-room-size diagram of the company's electric system is maintained at Fergus Falls to reflect the current status of all transmission lines. System operations department personnel have added prominent symbols pointing out the locations of individual life-support systems.

Otter Tail has compiled these lists through the combined efforts of its personnel in various division offices as well as its system operations staff. In addition, Otter Tail is presently seeking information about people using life-support systems indirectly served by the company. These areas include communities where Otter Tail delivers power for municipal and REA operations.

Otter Tail officials point out that it may not always be possible to quickly restore service to a community where an outage has occurred, due to the nature of the disruption. However, knowledge of customers' illnesses and an assessment of individual problems may make it possible for company employees to work out solutions. For instance, community and family representatives may be able to provide emergency standby service to a customer's residence or give advice on transportation to an unaffected community.

"Our position will always be to do whatever we are capable of doing to ensure that customers' individual needs and requirements are met," stressed Bigwood. "We do this as a concern for the customers we serve in our various communities."

Persons knowing of individuals who depend on life-support units are requested to contact their nearest Otter Tail service representative or division office and convey this information to the company.

More than 350,000 persons who lost their jobs because of major disasters have received a total of $97 million in special unemployment benefits since the Disaster Unemployment Assistance program of the U.S. Department of Labor began 10 years ago.

Prevention Is Best Animal Care Practice

Best illness is one that never happens. That goes for animals as well as for humans, in the thinking of the new president of the Minnesota veterinary medical association.

Dr. Walter A. Bonnett, Edina, is high on preventive medicine. Although he is a pet practitioner, he thinks broadly concerning the veterinary profession in behalf of some 700 MVMA members and its total role, which includes animal agriculture.

In keeping with Dr. Bonnett's belief that prevention is the best treatment, he encourages use of vaccinations and other means of helping dogs, cats and other pets avoid diseases. There are health programs for dog diseases such as flu, lepto, hepatitis, distemper, rabies and heartworm. Cats need to be watched in a preventive way, he says, for some of those same diseases plus upper-respiratory problems.

Dr. Bonnett is happy to see more Minnesota cities and towns pass ordinances against exotic pets, such as skunks, which are notorious for carrying rabies.

He also favors the new Minnesota legislation which allows pets in nursing homes. The MVMA is looking into a project which would make pets available on a visiting basis for a short time only at institutions of care. "It's amazing what pets can do for the mental attitude of most people," Dr. Bonnett said.

As president of MVMA, Dr. Bonnett will be encouraging continued programs in the area of preconditioning for beef calves. It is important, he says, to provide a good start for calves on feed.

"Our food supply requirements demand health promotion and disease prevention in animal agriculture," Dr. Bonnett says. "The fewer the number of animals we lose to disease the more efficient our system becomes and the lower we keep our food costs."

Dr. Bonnett also will place emphasis during his tenure as president of MVMA on continuing control of hog cholera. And he is encouraged by the possibility of vaccines being developed for TGE (transmissible gastroenteritis), another hog disease.

"U" M Concert Band May Make Tour Of China

If it can raise the money, the University of Minnesota concert band will be the first American band to tour the People's Republic of China.

China has invited the band to make a three-week tour this summer, and the 50 band members have their visas. Now the band needs to raise about $200,000 for the trip, according to its conductor Dr. Frank Bencriscutto.

"If we found a sponsor we'd be ready to go by June 1," Bencriscutto said. "I hope a major corporation will see the value in attaching their company to a tour like this. During our 1969 tour of the Soviet Union we found the level of congeniality increased a great deal after a concert. Music has a way of bringing people together. I remember wishing that we had business and government people with us to share in the dialogues."

Bencriscutto said the band would work with the University foundation on a fund-raising campaign.

Apparently, the invitation was part of China's recent effort to attract foreign youth groups. Concert band had applied for four years before being accepted.

"China suddenly seems to want the world to be aware of what kind of country it has," Bencriscutto said. "They're anxious to have youth groups tour because they seem to feel young people have fewer prejudices.

"We'd be the first American youth group to tour China, and we'd set the pattern for other groups," he said.

schools, vocational cooperative centers, CETA offices, Job Service offices, social service agencies and area AVTI, college and university counseling offices.

No applications will be accepted through the mail. Times and locations will be set up in each community in East Polk, Pennington and Red Lake counties, at which time either a parent or guardian must bring in the youth's completed application, along with a proof of income (such as a W-2 form, completed income tax forms, etc.). Applications will not be accepted unless the income can be verified when the application itself is brought in.

The exact time and place where applications are to be returned in this community will be published in a later issue of the Times.

If an application cannot be brought in to one of the application sites, it may be brought directly to the Inter-County office at Oklee. Office hours are 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. Any questions can be directed to Mary Lou Harthun, regional youth programs coordinator at the Inter-County community council. The telephone number is 796-5144.

Deadline for submitting all summer youth applications is May 2.

Chisanbop Is New Method Of Calculating

the element of fun in this game of learning, Chisanbop is notably effective in kindergarten through sixth grade," she said.

Hill and a friend, fifth grade teacher Bev McDonald of the R. J. Waugh school, became interested in Chisanbop and attended a one-week training session in Los Angeles a couple of years ago. They also attended a three-day course in New York City later. Both have conducted workshops and instructed courses in the system in the United States and Canada. The course is accredited at several colleges, she said.

Issuing a word of caution, she noted that simplicity of the system and the apparent speed at which progress is revealed may entice teachers and pupils into attempting to cover too much material in any given period.

"It cannot be overemphasized that total comprehension of every step at every stage of every category is essential," she said. "Small doses per class, with repetition until automatic response is noted, would be the procedure that yields permanent knowledge and mastery of the system."

We wondered if Chisanbop is only a fad, a flash-in-the-pan sort of ting which bursts on the educational scene for a time and then fades away as traditional methods again receive emphasis.

"It could be," she admits, "but it doesn't have to be a fad. It is a sound basic system which is complementary to basic mathematics. It has no contraductions of mathematical principles and it helps in understanding of how results are achieved.

"I guess that I would have to say that the only way it could become a fad is if teachers attempt to teach it without knowing what they are doing."

The workshop session here was intended to explain some of the basics of the method and stimulate interest. It is possible an accredited course could be arranged here in the future if interest warrants it, she said.

G.E.D. Exams Scheduled Here

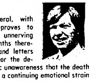
Persons interested must pre-register by calling the AVTI, Adult Education; 681-5424. There is no charge for the exams.



Dear friends,

The private funeral, with minimal publicity, proves to have at least one unnerving side effect. For months thereafter, phone calls and letters continue to arrive for the deceased, due to public unawareness that the death has occurred. This is a continuing emotional strain on the survivors.

Respectfully,

DNR Increases Production In Tree Nursery

To provide the tree seedlings needed for a $3¾ million program to increase the yield of pine and other softwoods from state, county and private lands, the Department of Natural Resources will be boosting production from its nurseries.

DNR forester William Berndt said the accelerated program, employing state and federal funds, will require a substantial rise in the number of new trees planted annually in the state.

Approximately 14 million trees will be shipped from DNR nurseries this spring, he said, but in 1983 the figure should reach 32 million or more.

Production will continue to climb thereafter, said Berndt, but at a less rapid rate.

Roughly half of the trees will be planted on public land and half on private lands. Most of the public lands to be planted are in state or county ownership.

Tree seedlings are sold to the public at the cost of production. The prices for conifer (evergreen) seedlings is $50 per thousand and $60 per thousand for leaf-bearing (deciduous) seedlings.

The private lands will include large forest industry holdings, small privately owned wood lots and Christmas tree plantations.

Berndt noted that Itasca county will plant 450,000 trees this year on county land — thanks to a grant from the Blandin Foundation.

Because of the increased demand for conifer seedlings this year, an additional one million Norway pine has been made available to the general public for planting on private land.

This was made possible by readjusting the growing stock inventory and taking the largest seedlings that would normally be ready for planting in 1981 and making them available this spring.

In addition to the Norway pine, small amounts of jack pine, green ash and soft maple are still available for planting this spring. Seedlings are sold on a first come, first served basis.

"March 15 is the last date to order trees — or until supplies are exhausted," said Berndt.

Details Of '80 Farm Program Made By ASCS

Marshall county ASCS committee chairman Alton Nybladh has announced the details of the 1980 farm program, stating there will be no set-aside or diversion of land under the 1980 program.

Farmers will have two options available to them — the high target price option or the low target price option. Under the high option producers will be required to plant within the farm's N.C.A. (normal crop acreage). Target prices under this option are wheat $3.63, barley $2.55 and corn $2.35.

If deficiency payments or disaster payments are earned they will be based on the high option for those who plant within their N.C.A.

Producers who overplant their N.C.A. will be eligible for lower target prices and disaster payments if they are paid. Low level target prices are wheat $3.08, barley $2.29 and corn $2.05. Producers will be eligible for grain loans under either option.

Nybladh also stated that there will be no early sign-up for the program. To be eligible for program benefits and grain loans producers will have to certify their planted acreage when they have completed planting.

Counted as N.C.A. crops for 1980 will be wheat, barley, corn, oats, flax, rye, sugar beets, dry edible beans, peas for processing, sunflowers, grain sorghum, canary grass, millet, potatoes and soybeans.

Steven Crown Wins Rhodes Scholarship

(The following is a summary of clippings compiled by the Times' Norden correspondent, Mrs. Luann Lewis, and received by Mr. and Mrs. Steve Steinert of route 1, Thief River Falls. Clippings are from the Seattle Times and The Daily News of Longview, Wash., concerning the son of a former resident of Thief River Falls. Steven Crown is a cousin of Mrs. (Julie Ranum) Steinert.)

Steven A. Crown has won a Rhodes scholarship to study at England's prestigious Oxford university. He is the son of Paul O. Crown, a former resident of Thief River Falls (in the 40's) and a graduate of Lincoln high school, who is now a Reynolds scientist. His mother, Joyce Davenport Crown, is a graduate of Harding high school in St. Paul, and is a surgical nurse. Grandparents were Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Crown of Thief River Falls (deceased) and Mr. and Mrs. William N. Davenport of St. Paul, also deceased. A. W. Crown was chief of police here for a number of years.

The 23-year-old University of Washington student is one of 32 Americans selected in 1979 for the scholarships, established in 1902 by the will of Cecil Rhodes, a British philantropist and colonial pioneer.

The two-year scholarship is worth about $14,000 a year. To win it, Crown had to go through three personal interviews, write a 1,000-word personal statement and send the selection committee his official transcript.

Scholarship applicants are judged on excellence in intellectual attainment, character, leadership and physical vigor. His grade point average is 3.7 and his scholastic aptitude test scores measure 670, considered very high. He was also vice president of "Russian House" at the University of Washington, where students speak only Russian.

Crown was in the forefront when seven American trawlers from Seattle rendezvoused with a 570-foot Russian factory ship, the Sulak, recently in the Bering sea northwest of the Pribilofs. Here, for two months, he will be "running everything" for the only joint Soviet-American fishing company in existence; the Seattle-based, U.S.-U.S.S.R. Marine Resources, Inc.

Under the firm's international agreement, American fishermen generally catch low-value, high-volume species for processing by Russian factory vessels. Most of the frozen products are marketed in the Far East. On the latest venture the target catch is herring, which will be harvested in an area commercially unfeasible for shore-side processing.

As a representative and interpreter for the company, Crown will be responsible for all decisions, such as moving the fleet, and for any arbitration between the two parties. He speaks fluent Russian and is considered a vital diplomatic cog in getting Russians and Americans to work together. He definitely feels that there could have been no better preparation for the job than his good liberal arts education.

Crown, of Kalama, Washington, will graduate in June with baccalaureate degrees in Russian language and literature and in history. He is leaning strongly toward a career as a university philosophy professor. At Oxford, he will be in a program called the honor school of philosophy and modern languages.

His special interest is Russian religious philosophy from the middle 19th to early 20th Centuries. His interest in philosophy stems both from his ties to Christianity and his study of history, he says. Crown began studying Russian in the seventh grade in Medford, Ore. At Kalama high school he was the student body president and was on the varsity basketball and track teams. For three summers he worked in an air-pollution-control laboratory for the Reynolds Metals company in Longview, Wash.

During the 1978 winter and spring quarters, Crown was an exchange student at Leningrad state university in Russia. He found he was "not as opposed to socialism as I thought I was at home". But having been in both cultures, he prefers "the Western way of life and its ideas of freedom, free inquiry, and an open approach to questioning man, truth and reality."

AAA Consumer Auto Repair Plan Expanded

Auto repairs have long been a major consumer headache as Americans waste about $26.5 billion annually on needless auto repairs, according to a recent report by the U.S. transportation department.

"The Minnesota State Automobile association (AAA) is seeking out high standard repair facilities and letting the public know about them," according to Glen Krenz of Thief River Falls, area district sales manager for Minnesota AAA.

Now displaying the red, white and blue sign of a Minnesota AAA approved auto repair services (AARS) facility are: Northern Motors, Inc. and West Side Motors of Thief River Falls, Inc.

"Operations displaying the AARS sign have been examined in depth by AAA field personnel and have met stringent standards of high-quality workmanship and customer service," explained Krenz.

"What it boils down to is that if someone has a problem with his car, he can drive it into a AARS facility and know that he's not going to be sold a bill of goods or be on the wrong end of some kind of con," said John Lawrence, director of members' services for AAA.

"We're very pleased with the success of the AARS program thus far," continued Lawrence. "Evaluation cards returned by customers of AARS facilities indicate that 99 per cent were satisfied with the quality of work done on their vehicle and would return to the facility for future service work," Lawrence said.

The AARS program began as a pilot project in southeastern Minnesota in August of 1977. Since then it has grown to include over 120 AARS facilities throughout most of Minnesota. Statewide expansion of the program will be completed this year.

DAV Service Unit To Visit In Crookston

Free assistance for local veterans and their families will be available when a field service unit of the Disabled American Veterans (DAV) visits Crookston on April 11. This is the seventh consecutive year that one of these office-eqipped vans has traveled to communities throughout the state, bringing free counseling and claims service to veterans and their families.

The DAV field service unit will be located at the parking lot south of the courthouse. These units are generally open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Fully qualified and trained DAV veterans' benefits experts will staff the traveling service facility. They can assist veterans and their families in filing claims for such federal and state benefits as disability compensation, pension, employment and job training programs, educational benefits, hospitalization and medical care, social security, death claims and more.

During the first six years of the DAV's nationwide tour with its fleet of nine field service units, more than 300,000 veterans and dependents took advantage of this free service. As a result of these visits, DAV national service officers filed 95,000 claims for disability compensation and pension benefits alone. Thousands of claims for other government benefits were also filed.

Veterans need not be members of the DAV to take advantage of this free service.

The project is an extension of the 60-year-old 650,000-member organization's national service program, that provides a variety of assistance at no cost to veterans and their families. Under the program, the DAV employs 280 full-time national service officers — 90 per cent of whom are disabled veterans of the Vietnam war period — at Veterans administration (VA) facilities across the country.

During the most recent full year for which statistics are available, these veterans' benefits specialists handled 275,000 individual cases, winning federal benefits totaling more than $700 million for veterans and their families.

"Special emphasis is placed on Vietnam era veterans because many of these men and women aren't using the benefits they've earned, some out of sheer distrust of the government that sent them to Southeast Asia to fight an unpopular war," said DAV national commander Paul L. Thompson, himself a veteran of the Vietnam war.

"It's surprising how many people don't even know about benefits they're entitled to by law until they step into one of our mobile offices," said DAV executive director Denvel D. Adams. Explaining the need for the program, Adams added, "Many veterans, dependents and widows live some distance from VA facilities where DAV services are available. Our field service unit program carries these services right to the doorsteps of these people."

DAV officials urge veterans of all wars — particularly disabled veterans — to take advantage of this free service by visiting the DAV mobile office to discuss any problems or questions they may have concerning veterans' benefits.

Local DAV and DAV Auxiliary members are cooperating with the DAV's national headquarters to bring this special service program to the area.

Summary Plan Rules Finished By Labor Dep't.

Employee benefit plan participants and beneficiaries will be able to determine when and if they will get benefits, and plan officials will know what information they must provide as a result of summary plan description rules completed recently by the department of labor.

Rules finalize certain interim regulations which ensure that participants and beneficiaries in employee pension and welfare plans receive the information they are entitled to under the employee retirement income security Act (ERISA). Information must be included in a simply written summary plan description (SPD) issued to each plan participant and beneficiary.

Final regulations, which are essentially unchanged from interim rules issued as part of an SPD regulation package on July 19, 1977, clarify when plans are subject to the reporting and disclosure requirements of ERISA for purposes of providing the SPD to their participants and beneficiaries. The regulations also explain what information should be provided to retirees, certain beneficiaries and separated participants with vested benefits.

Ian D. Lanoff, administrator of the Labor Department's office of pension and welfare benefit programs, emphasized the importance of the SPD as part of the protection ERISA provides. The summary plan description is the single most important item to tell participants about their rights and benefits in a plan and to help them prepare for retirement, he said.

An SPD must include information on when workers can join the plan, the number of years they must work to earn benefits the age at which they can retire, how a break in employment can hurt their benefit eligibility, any widow or widower protections, and the names of plan officials.

Larger Down Payments Made On '79 Homes

Home buyers in 1979 came up with a higher percentage of the sales price for down payments on a home and assumed higher monthly payments as the cost of new and existing used homes continued to rise, the Family Housing bureau, a public information service of a large insurance company said.

Based on its fourth annual survey of recent home buyers conducted in 11 representative markets nationwide, the Family Housing bureau said the average down payment accounted for 24.9 per cent of the total perchase price for homes purchased by survey respondents in 1979, up from 21.4 per cent in 1978.

Of the respondents in the survey, 36.6 were first-time buyers averaging 28.4 years old and 63.4 per cent were repeat buyers with an average age of 34.7 years. Average down payment of a first-time buyer in 1979 was 17.6 per cent of the purchase price, up from 12.4 in 1978. For a repeat buyer, the average down payment was 29 per cent of the price, up from 27.6 per cent in 1978.

Survey showed that the median price of a home purchased in 1979 was $58,100, compared to $54,750 in 1978, $49,320 in 1977 and $43,340 in 1976, the first year the survey was conducted. Median price paid by first-time home buyers in 1979 was $50,800, up from $46,700 in 1978. For repeat buyers, the median price was $64,600, up from $59,180.

All buyers contracted for higher monthly payments in 1979. Average monthly payment was $449 which compares to $384 in 1978, $361 in 1977 and $329 in 1976.

As a percentage of income, the monthly payment rose to 28.2 per cent, up from 26 per cent in 1978, 25 per cent in 1977 and 24 per cent in 1976. If this rate were to continue, home buyers would be spending almost half of their total monthly income on housing by 1990, but the Housing bureau adds that it is highly unlikely that this would happen.

Average monthly payment for a first-time home buyer in the survey was $421 and for repeat buyers $466. This was up from 1978 when the average payment was $377 for first-time buyers and $388 for repeats.

If the income of the head of household was under $15,000, the average monthly payment was $334. In 1978, it was $277. For the head of household making between $15,000 and $20,000, the average payment was $349 compared with $326 in 1978. If income was more than $20,000, the average payment was $496, up from $422.

Proportion of buyers paying in full for a home stayed practically even: 4.1 per cent compared with 4.2 per cent a year earlier. But 2.8 per cent of first-timers paid in full, compared with 1.3 per cent in 1978, while 4.6 per cent of repeat buyers did so, compared with 6.3 per cent in 1978.

Job Service Has System On Complaints

Job Service also will assist in referral of complaints about alleged violations of state and federal employment laws to the proper enforcement agencies.

Complaints can be initiated by contacting the nearest Job Service office of Norman McGraw, monitor-advocate, at 390 N. Robert Street, St. Paul, MN 55101; telephone 612-296-4296.

SLOW DOWN AND LIVE!

Extension Given For Filing Taxes

Taxpayers who need extra time to file their income tax returns may request an automatic two-month extension by filing a Form 4868 with the Internal Revenue service.

Form 4868 is the "Application for automatic extension of time to file U.S. individual income tax return." The taxpayer must compute the tax expected to be owed for 1979. Any prepayments of tax from withholdings or estimated tax payments, etc., should be deducted from the tax. Payment of any balance due must be sent with Form 4868 to the IRS on or before the normal filing date.

Taxpayers who receive the extension cannot use the Form 1040A or have the IRS compute their tax bill. They must file a Form 1040 and the amount of estimated tax paid with the Form 4868 should be entered on the appropriate line of the Form 1040.

If the amount of tax paid with the Form 4868 does not cover the taxpayer's total liability, the taxpayer is required to pay interest on the remaining tax due. Further, if the unpaid tax is over 10 per cent of the total tax bill, the law permits levy of additional penalties on the taxpayer.

U.S. citizens outside the U.S. or Puerto Rico on the date of their tax deadlines can receive an automatic two-month extension of the filing deadline without filing Form 4868. This provision applies both to taxpayers whose deadline is April 15 to those who file returns on a fiscal year basis. Taxpayers who qualify for this type of extension must attach a statement to their tax return when they file that says they were outside the U.S. or Puerto Rico on the date of their filing deadline.

Taxpayers who expect to file Form 2555, "Deduction from or Exclusion of, Income Earned Abroad," can obtain an extension of time until 30 days after the end of their qualifying period. These taxpayers should use Form 2350, "Application for Extension of Time to File U.S. Income Tax Return." If moving expenses are involved, extra time can be obtained by following the special instructions of the Form 2350.

Additional extensions are granted only under unusual circumstances. Taxpayers can apply for such extensions by letter or by filling out Form 2688, "Application for Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return." The statement must include the reasons why the additional extension is necessary.

The IRS cautions taxpayers to file requests for additional extensions early enough to be able to file their return on time if the request is rejected.

Farmers Feel Grain Embargo Inappropriate

By a margin of 67 per cent, Minnesota and the nation's top farmers believe the U.S. suspension of grain sales to the USSR was inappropriate, according to a survey conducted by "Farm Futures", a national farm marketing magazine. In addition, the survey contradicted a USDA planting intentions survey, indicating that producers will make spring planting and purchasing adjustments because of a partial embargo.

Magazine survey was limited to full-time farmers, those with gross farm sales over $100,000. The big surprise in spring planting intentions was a 12 per cent increase in cotton acreage and a five per cent decrease in soybean acreage. USDA planting survey showed no adjustment in these acreages.

While the USDA survey was conducted ahead of the embargo, USDA officials had been suggesting the need for a soybean reserve because of a possible shift to soybeans which require less fertilizer to produce. Magazine's survey last year showed an explosion in soybean acreage, while the USDA's intentions report showed only a four per cent increase; final planted soybean acreage was up 11 per cent.

The magazine's market analyst explained the change by pointing out that the price relationship between corn and soybeans continues to favor corn even after the embargo, a relationship top farmers are more likely to recognize. Switch to cotton is attributed to climbing prices, which are above highs made in 1973, and new export demand from China.

Top farmers also indicated rural communities would feel the embargo impact, with 52 per cent saying they would cut back on farm equipment purchases. Only contradiction to the trend was plans by 30 per cent of the farmers to increase the purchase of storage facilities, apparently a move to control the grain they market.

They've Done It Again! We Applaud Them

Thief River Falls young people have pulled off another successful pair of events, one of which is continuing tonight and tommorrow. We refer, of course, to the Lincoln musical and the recreational skating committee ice show.

The musical — "Where's Charley?" — drew enthusiastic response Friday and Saturday evenings and is scheduled for performances tonight and Tuesday in the Lincoln auditorium. If you missed it the first couple of nights and can still get tickets, take a trip down to Lincoln and see what today's young people are capable of accomplishing.

This is Lincoln's 19th musical production and in that time the annual spring production has become an institution, eagerly awaited by many long-time residents and viewed with admiration and a little awe by newcomers to the community. Director Dave Morken displays a sixth sense for musical selection and casting that seems to virtually assure a successful production.

Although the musicals may be outstanding entertainment, we doff our hats to the recreational skaters and their indomitable volunteer leaders. Their emphasis is on participation and they succeed admirably in their effort. Every youngster who wants to take part, regardless of skill level or ability, is given that opportunity.

The ice show is truly a marvel, and not only for its display of talent, although there is certainly talent on display. It is a blend of cooperation, compromise, determination, ingenuity, abilities, experience and a liberal sprinkling of psychology. And for the most part it is a volunteer effort with countless hours of donated time selflessly given out of an affection for children, a respect for the community and a love for the sport of skating.

In a day when the tendency seems to be to turn inward and ask "what's in it for me?", events such as the Fantasy on Ice are an assurance that volunteerism and service above self are still viable. And we are sure that when the people who poured their hearts and souls into the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon ice show finally collapsed at home with the realization that it was over for another year, they did so with a warm glow inside which can only come from the satisfaction of performing a worthwhile service in a job well done.

Those of us who did nothing more than watch the results of their work — from the skate-shuffling little pumpkins to the flashing blades of the free-stylers — did so with a continuing deep-felt appreciation. We applaud you all.

Free Press . . . Or Is It?

Following editorial is from the Ely Echo:

Rudy Boschwitz, Senator from Minnesota, has become concerned that newspapers, more and more, are being swallowed up by chain organizations and that the news or editorial emphasis may represent a smaller and smaller viewpoint of the society. Boschwitz notes that 691 daily newspapers, out of 1,759 in the nation, are all that are left of the independents. A similar situation exists with weekly newspapers.

The increase in newspaper chain ownership, as the Senator has discovered, is mainly the result of federal tax laws, especially inheritance taxes, which make it often impossible for a newspaper owner to leave the business to a son or daughter.

This, of course, is not just a newspaper problem. Sometime, in the dim past, the tax leeches in Washington decided that anyone who dies and leaves a business to his offspring, should have the value of that business taxed to the hilt. In many cases there is no cash in the business to pay off the taxes. The business must be sold to pay the taxes. . .and a chain organization slurps it up. In the newspaper business, there is seldom any cash anytime, so those businesses are particularly vulnerable to destruction.

In addition, costs of equipment, newsprint, photographic supplies, etc., are more easily met by a chain or syndicate. In many such groups, several papers are printed on one centrally-located press. However, each time an independent newspaper becomes a part of a chain, there is always the chance of more central control and less independent thought. Fortunately, it is not as critical as it might be. Most newspaper chain owners are smart enough to let their editors and writers write. Also, most writers are pretty independent. They are a lot of other things, too, like sometimes erratic, spiteful, sentimental and flakey and a few other descriptions. . .but most of them do not take kindly to having somebody up the ladder monkey with the truth in a story. And most newspaper owners know they have a problem there, but they cannot get the paper out without writers. Even on independent newspapers, there is often a sort of wary truce between owners, editors and writers.

But this is not to lessen the danger Boschwitz points out. As a member of a family who lost relatives to Hitler, he noted that had there been a truly free and independent press in Germany during the 1920's and 1930's, Hitler might never have gotten to power.

The Senator and some of his colleagues are looking at the inheritance laws which are such a detriment to a continuation of a free and independent press in the U.S. We hope he also looks at some of the other erosions of that free press, such as court rulings that police may enter a newspaper office and go through the files or go through the files of any reporter and even require a reporter to take the witness stand, if involved in a court case, and testify as to his "state of mind" when he wrote a story or editorial, even though that may have been months previous.

It may be that some new laws must be enacted to further bolster the freedom to speak and freedom to print. Or we may wake up one day and find out that all the newspapers belong to one chain and that chain is owned by the political party in power.

Go get 'em, Rudy.

Hooked On Inflation

Following editorial is from the Wadena Pioneer-Journal:

A newsbit estimate says that if the current 13 per cent annual inflation rate continues, the car that costs $8,000 today will cost $29,000 just 10 years from now and the $60,000 home will cost $200,000.

Those surprising figures are the result of "compounding". Each year the 13 per cent is on a bigger figure so the increase in terms of dollars is more.

Most of us haven't bothered to sit down to figure out exactly how much more things may cost a year or 10 years from now. We only know that prices are going up faster than we can save money to buy things. So we go into debt to buy things at today's dollars, figuring to pay for them with tomorrow's dollars. We only have to look around to see that the people who have done the best are those who went into debt years ago to buy a new home or piece of property. The more they went into debt yesterday, the more they are ahead today.

Inflation penalizes the savers. The inflation rate is greater than the interest on the savings or the dividends from stock and bonds.

We also know that if inflation should end, we would be caught with some high-priced purchases and a lot of debt on which we're paying high interest. But more and more of us are willing to take that risk. We see inflation steadily getting worse instead of better.

Finally, we get to the point where most of us can't live without inflation. Without it, our wages won't go up enough to pay for the stuff we've gone in debt for. We're hooked.

We've got a feeling this country is hooked. Unfortunately, we don't know how fast or how far this thing is going to go. Worse, nobody else knows either. If they did, they wouldn't have to make a living writing about it.

Borrowed Nonsense:

Sven got a job on the docks loading 300-pound anvils aboard a freighter. The cargo was nearly all stowed away when the foreman heard a splash and rushed to the rail to see Sven struggling in the water. "Throw me a rope!" he pleaded, then sank out of sight. Reappearing again he cried out loudly for a rope. The third time his head appeared above the water he shoulted out angrily: "If you don't throw me a rope, I'm gonna drop this anvil!"

"Eat a heavy meal right before you go to bed," advised the family physician to the patient complaining of insomnia.

"But two months ago you told me not to eat for at least two hours before bedtime," the patient protested.

"That should show you," the physician solemnly declared, "just how fast medical science is advancing these days."

Winston Churchill was asked by a reporter what he thought of the prediction that women would be ruling the world in the year 2000. His answer: "They still will, eh?"

Workshop On Handicapped At MSU April 21

Dorothy Tombaugh, a nationally known consultant on making science courses more accessible to handicapped students, will lead a workshop on "Teaching Science to Handicapped Students" Monday, April 21 at Moorhead state university.

The workshop will be offered twice, from 10 a.m. to noon in Hagen hall auditorium, and repeated from 1:15 to 3 p.m. The morning session will be followed by an informal discussion over a brown bag lunch.

Both workshops are free and open to the public, but they're especially intended for science and special education teachers and for handicapped students at regional high schools, colleges and universities.

Tombaugh, a high school biology teacher in Ohio, and her husband, an engineer, have pioneered in designing modified lab equipment and devices for handicapped students. They are presenting workshops this year under a grant from the National Science foundation.

The two-hour workshop sessions will feature a film, slides, exhibits of equipment and materials and open discussions.

County Board Proceedings

Official Proceedings
Board of County Commissioners
Pennington County, Minnesota
March 20, 1980

Pursuant to adjournment, the County Board met in the Commissioners' Room in the Courthouse in Thief River Falls at 10:00 A.M., March 20, 1980.

Members present: Hoffman, Koop, Stenberg and Tasa. Absent: Grabanski. Commissioner Grabanski joined the Board for the afternoon session.

The minutes of the meeting of March 4th were read and approved as read.

The Commissioners reviewed the tour of the other County facilities that they were able to visit and inspect on Monday and discussed some changes that should be taken into account upon planning for the future.

Commissioner Koop reported on the visit to the Office of the State Aid Engineer in St. Paul that he and Engineer Olson and Attorney Olin took part in along with representatives from the St. Hilaire community relative to the St. Hilaire Bridge proposed construction. A letter has been received from the Engineer indicating certain road realignments before the bridge could be constructed and the visit was undertaken to clarify just to what extent this should be done and the time frame for the completion of the changes. The Board was informed that the West approach must be realigned and run directly to Highway 32 to The West at the time the bridge is built while the East approach should be planned now and re-aligned with a 5 year time frame. The prime concern behind these demands by the State is the safety factors involved. The Board instructed the Engineer to design the re-alignment so that estimates can be available to assist the Board in the decisions that must be made. The Board took the matter under advisement.

Problems relating to financing the Highway program in the County were discussed. Moved by Koop that the following resolution be adopted:

WHEREAS, Highway maintenance costs and Highway construction costs have risen to the point where it is difficult to keep roads in repair and improvements will have to be curtailed and rescheduled over a longer time frame, and WHEREAS, Modern technology is providing for larger vehicles and heavier loads which requires improved road beds to allow economical movement of farm products to the markets.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that the Minnesota Legislature take such steps as are necessary to provide additional funds for the continued support of good roads and for the improvement of present inadequate roads by providing an increase of 2 cents per gallon in State tax and by allocating a portion of the sales tax on Motor Vehicles and Accessories to the appropriate fund to accomplish this purpose.

The foregoing resolution was duly seconded by Commissioner Stenberg and upon vote declared unanimously adopted.

At 2:00 P.M. the Board proceeded to open bids for sale and removal of the old Goodridge Grader Shed as duly advertised and called for. The following bids were opened and read aloud: Wayne W. Holmgren, Rt. 3, TR Falls, $1,027.00; Charles Kiesow, Goodridge, $270.00; Jim Mutnansky, Goodridge, $513.13; Kruse Backhoe Service, St. Hilaire, $451.90. Moved by Hoffman seconded by Grabanski that the bid of Wayne W. Holmgren be accepted as the highest and best bid received and the Engineer, Auditor and Chairman be instructed to enter into agreement for sale and removal of said building according to specifications. Motion declared unanimously carried.

Sheriff Richards then presented matters relative to his Office and along with the Engineer and Board discussed the road maintenance problems along with load limits and procedures for implementing these limits and for the Sheriff's role in checking weights of loads being hauled on the roads. The Sheriff has been provided with new portable scales and indicated that the roads will be patroled as best the Department can.

Plats that had been presented for preliminary approval previously were presented for final approval and upon motion by Hoffman seconded by Koop the Plat entitled Rensla's First Subdivision containing 3.08 acres in SW¼SW¼ of Section 26 in North Township and known as Harry Oen's Riverbend Section subdivision containing 20 acres in Govt. Lots 7 and 10 in Rocksbury Township be approved. Motion declared unanimously carried.

Moved by Stenberg seconded by Hoffman that meeting adjourn to convene at 10:00 A.M., April 8, 1980 with the Board to return at 7:00 P.M. this evening to conduct hearings on road and bridge plans as advertised. Motion carried.

Official Proceedings
Board of County Commissioners
Pennington County, Minnesota
March 20, 1980

Pursuant to publication of Notice of Hearing on the 5 year Plan for Roads and the 5 year Plan for Bridges, the County Board met in the 1st Floor Meeting Room in the Courthouse for the purpose of receiving Public Imput into the planning process for the Road program and the Bridge Program. Hearing called for 7:00 P.M.

Members present: Hoffman, Grabanski, Koop, Stenberg and Tasa. All present.

County Engineer Arvid Olson and County Attorney Dave Olin were also present. A registration of those persons present was circulated to ascertain how many and who attended and the list revealed that 48 people were present.

Board Chairman Tasa called Hearing to order and reviewed quickly the procedures for receiving and using State Aid Highway Funds and gave a short version of what the funds have been spent for in recent years.

The 5 year Bridge Plan was reviewed year by year and bridge by bridge in the order listed with the explanation that both County and Township Bridges are included because of the need for Engineering of Township Bridges and the availability of the County Engineering Department. When the explanation was complete the audience was asked for questions and then the Board moved to the 5 Year Road Plan.

The 5 year Road Plan was reviewed by the Engineer on a year by year basis. Various questions were asked by the people with much of the questioning concerning C.R. 10 that runs North & South between T.H. No. 1 and S.A. No. 3. The Board was asked to place No. 10 on the County Plan so that it does not get forgotten. No. 8 the extension of the road that goes straight West of the Y (the old road to Angus) was mentioned as a road that would connect with a good Polk County road and needed attention. No. 14 that goes North toward Rosewood was mentioned as a road that needs attention. The North-South road that extends South from T.H. 59, East of Thief River Falls, to Hazel, No. 80, is in need of upgrading because of the new Elevator in Hazel. Also the Board was reminded of the need for a repair program for C.R. 61 that extends East past Woodland Construction.

Commissioner Koop then asked for Public Imput into a version of construction that involves a policy of grading a new road to allow for a 42 ft. roadbed in the future but by changing the slope it can be a 32 ft. roadbed and make for a better maintenance program. Assistant Engineer Godfred Svir explained the new version which entails a more expensive program upon regrading but then provides for the next improvement with a much reduced cost. After reviewing the process it appeared that the State standards mandated the new procedure as far as width of right of way but the narrowing of the roadbed makes for a saving during the maintenance as a gravel road.

The meeting was then thrown open to questions about any phase of the Highway Operaion and the proposed grading of CR 12-7-13 was mentioned as a possible problem with drainage. The Engineer explained that dry corssings were designed for the newly graded road which should not then change the drainage in the area.

Questions were then introduced casting doubt upon whether the No. 12-7-13 road project should be implemented at all. After discussion the thought was advanced that the program should proceed because of the planning that has already gone into it and that the need is in reality still there.

State Aid Road No. 6 running East from North of Kratka bridge was then mentioned as a road that should be looked at for possible upgrading.

The discussion continued until nearly 10:00 P.M. whereupon the Chairman declared the Hearing adjourned and the Board took the information ascertained under advisement.

COUNTY AUDITOR & EX-OFFICIO, Clerk OF THE BOARD.

Letters to the Editor

To The Editor:

In reply to the letter by Olaf Stolaas of Oklee:

Mr. Stolaas:

You misunderstood my letter in the paper. I am not afraid of Brezhnev or Castro or Tito or any other communist leader because I know they are communist and I know they are my enemy.

But as for where the President and Congress and Supreme Court stand I am never quite sure from one day to the next whether they are friend or foe. They say one thing and do the opposite, or worse yet, do nothing. For instance — the sell-out of the Panama canal, the betrayal of Taiwan, legalized murder, abrogation of our Bill of Rights, etc., etc.

Communism is taking over one country at a time and no one is trying to stop them, least of all the U.S..

Sincerely,
-s-Mary Merzil

Bemidji, winner of five straight Northwest Athletic Conference outdoor track titles and champion in two straight and three of the last four NWAC indoor meets, looks like it has itself another strong squad this spring after a solid second place finish in the recent 12-team Moorhead indoor invitational.

Perennial power Moorhead won the event with 104 points, followed by Bemidji with 77 and Breckenridge 57. Of the rest, North Half Region 8AA teams Fergus Falls had 30, Detroit Lakes 7 and Park Rapids 4.

The difference between the two leaders came in two events — the pole vault and triple jump where the Spuds piled up 29 points and the Lumberjacks failed to score and lost the meet by 27 points.

Bemidji produced four winners as Tom Campbell set a new meet record in winning the high jump at 6-3 while barely missing 6-5; Duane Fisher won the 400-meter dash in 53.94; Ron Wolfe won the 1500-meter run in 4:17.64; and the two-mile relay team of Fisher, Brian Kraft, Steve Doggett and Wolfe ran a meet record 8:27.84.

The Lumberjacks are coming off one of their finest seasons in history in 1979 when Bemidji won seven meets and finished second twice, including a first place finish in the Region 8AA Sub Region 4 meet held in Thief River Falls and finishing second to Moorhead in the Region 8AA meet.

Graduation took ten seniors, wiping out the hurdlers and long jump, and another crucial loss is that of senior sprinter-long jumper Dale Leonard, currently undergoing treatment at Brainerd. He set a school record 26-1¼ in the long jump last spring.

But Campbell, who recovered from a football injury that took him out of the entire basketball season, and Rob Egersdorf give Bemidji the best set of high jumpers in the state. Egersdorf, who was battling a flu bug when he went 6-1 for third place at Moorhead, was second in last year's Class AA state meet and Campbell shared third place.

Unveiling of a new all-weather track this spring should also prove a great boost to the Bemidji track program.

Backcourt Club Promoting Basketball

If you feel like giving the Thief River Falls basketball program a helping hand plan to be at a special meeting of the Thief River Falls Backcourt Club Sat., April 12, at 9:30 a.m. at the Rex Cafe.

Under the direction of Backcourt Club president Frank Womack and Vern Treat, who will serve as program coordinator, the group is making plans to promote basketball in Thief River Falls, beginning with the implementation of a summer basketball program for students in grades 3-11.

The April 12 meeting will also discuss fund-raising projects; elect officers for the 1980-81 season; and look for new ideas from club members to promote basketball in Thief River Falls.

Backcourt Club leaders will stress parental involvement in the program including volunteers for year-round supervision in the school gyms.

"All parents who have children involved in basketball in grades 3-11 are strongly urged to attend the meeting," pleaded Treat, Lincoln high school assistant basketball coach. "We feel we can easily improve the opportunities our children have to play basketball in Thief River Falls. But we can only do it through your interest and involvement."

Miscellaneous

+ Warroad sent three busloads of fans to Winnipeg Friday to watch David Christian and his Winnipeg Jets face the Minnesota North Stars in an NHL hockey game. Christian and Neal Broten of Roseau, members of the gold medal-winning United States Olympic hockey team, will be in Thief River Falls Sat., April 12, for a promotional appearance at Thomas Motors, Inc.

+ Aaron Broten of Roseau completed an outstanding first year with the University of Minnesota hockey team as the Gophers' second-leading scorer with 25 goals, 47 assists and 72 points. His playmaking was instrumental in setting up most of the scoring opportunities for season-long linemate Tim Harrer who won the WCHA scoring record and set team records with 53 goals and 82 points en route to winning WCHA player of the year honors. Although records do not prove it completely, said the Minnesota sports information department, Broten's 25 goals may be the most ever by a Gopher Freshman. WCHA freshman of the Year according to the Denver Post honor selections, Aaron is expected to be skating on a line with brother Neal, a freshman star with the Gophers last year before joining the U.S. Olympic team, and Butsy Erickson — a line that terrorized the prep ranks at Roseau high school. Erickson made a strong impression with the Gophers when he became eligible midway through the 1979-80 season after transferring from Cornell. And a fourth Roseau product — Mark Huglen, who announced recently he would attend Minnesota next year — will be on the blueline for the Gophers.

Harris, Parker Lead 1979-80 Northland Basketball Squad

Terry Harris, a 6-5 freshman, and Vince Parker, a 5-5 sophomore, made the headlines this winter while leading the Northland community college basketball team to a share of the Northwest Division title and a third place finish in the 1980 MJCAA state basketball tournament.

It was quite an act, the Parker and Harris show; the ultimate one-two punch; an enviable inside-outside attack; Mutt and Jeff; the long and short of it. Together they averaged nearly 50 points per game and put their names into virtually every statistical category in the school record book.

Harris, named the team's most valuable player, averaged 27.8 points per game. He scored 41 points twice and also hit 40, 39, 37, 36 and 35 at different times of the year. Parker was the team's co-captain with sophomore Mike Carriere, averaged 20.0 points per game and had a high of 34 while also scoring 33 and 31.

The No. 8 scorer in the final NJCAA national scoring charts, Harris earned a bundle of post-season honors. He was an All-Northwest Division pick, the division's top vote-getter; an MJCAA all-state tournament choice; a unanimous MJCAA all-state selection; and a first-team member of the five-state area NJCAA All-Region 13 squad. Parker got his share of glory, too, as he landed positions on the all-division and all-state tournament teams and was an honorable mention all-state pick.

While Harris, a Dearborne Heights, Mich. product, and Parker, from Inkster, Mich., basked in the glory and received their share of praise from Northland coach Chet Engelman, others on the team contributed significantly in areas not quite as noticeable to the average fan.

"A lot of our kids had good seasons," explained Engelman. "We generally prefer to have a little better balanced scoring, but the personnel we had this year forced us to change that. Everybody had their roles and they fit into those roles very well. It's easy to appreciate the things that Harris and Parker did; those are visable. But others also played key roles for us."

Carriere, a 6-2 forward from Middle River, and Chris Kneen, a 6-7 mid-season addition after the White Bear Lake native played two years of football for the Northmen, are two players who fit into their roles perfectly, said Engelman.

Carriere, normally drew the defensive assignment on the opponent's top offensive performer. He was a strong rebounder, an excellent passer and came up with 86 loose ball recoveries this winter that lifted his two-year total to 163, which places him fifth on the all-time school chart in that category.

"Mike was very important to us," acknowledged Engelman. "He did a lot of things for us and he did them well."

Kneen gave the Northmen a big man in the middle they so desperately needed. He didn't have to score, but he was an excellent free throw shooter; he rebounded well; and played strong defense in the middle. His worth to the team did not go unnoticed.

"I don't think we'd have been in the state tournament without Chris Kneen," noted Engelman.

But still, it was the Harris and Parker combination that made the Northmen go.

Harris' 724 points set a new Northland single season scoring record, bettering David Dickey's 611 points in 1974-75. Parker's 521 points placed him third, and raised his two-year total to 801, good for sixth place on the Northland all-time scoring charts headed by Dickey who scored 1,073 during the 1973-74 and 1974-75 seasons. And Harris' one-season 724 points is good for seventh place on the Northland career scoring list.

In addition to scoring, Harris set a new single season Northland record by blocking 77 shots, which is good for second place on the all-time career charts led by Dave Davenport who blocked 102 shots during the 1976-77 and 1977-78 seasons.

Harris' 374 rebounds this winter was second only to the 413 grabbed by Tony Burke during the 1971-72 season.

For Parker, he finished third with 176 on the all-time Northland assist charts led by David Dickey's 513; was second with 110 in the single season assist figures led by Dickey's 319 in 1973-74; was sixth with 155 in the all-time loose ball recovery charts led by Dickey's 279; and was tenth with 84 in the single season recovery standards led by Dickey with 147 in 1974-75.

Tony Smith, a 6-2 freshman from Inkster who averaged 9.7 points per game this winter, joined Parker and Carriere among the loose ball recovery leaders with 94, fifth best in the single season record charts. Carriere's 86 placed him seventh.

On the playing court Northland finished the 1979-80 season with a 17-9 record with regular season wins over the Northland alumni 102-85, University of Winnipeg junior varsity 115-72, Red River community college 113-87, Winnipeg Independents 82-74, Trinity Bible College 79-76 and 90-65, University of North Dakota junior varsity 87-58, Waseca 78-73, Itasca 108-65, Hibbing 109-89, Rainy River 108-99, Crookston 93-84 and 83-82, Brainerd 81-70 and Fergus Falls 94-93 in triple overtime. Losses came at the hands of Bottineau 76-75, Mesabi 81-74, Vermilion 79-66, Fergus Falls 89-86, Lake Region 74-48 and 111-79, University of North Dakota junior varsity 71-66 and Brainerd 83-82 in overtime.

But those seven season-opening nonconference games were declared forfeit losses for the Northmen when it was discovered that Lyndell Knight, a starter at forward, was ineligible on a transfer rule.

Northland finished the season with its best-ever performance in post-season play with a third place effort in the MJCAA state tournament by beating Mesabi 90-79, losing to tournament favorite Golden Valley Lutheran 103-90 and knocking off Fergus Falls 107-94.

"I thought our kids played excellent basketball in the state tournament," allowed Engelman, who was never able to say that in six previous MJCAA appearances. "No question it was the best state tournament performance we've ever had," he said. "Part of our problem before is that whenever we got to the state tournament we never played any defense at all. This year we played well at both ends of the court."

Ten new records were put into the Northland books this winter, eight of them by Harris who set single season records for points (724), scoring average (27.8), field goals (323) and blocked shots (77); tied a single game mark for free throw percentage (100 per cent, 7-for-7) and set a single game record for blocked shots (8); and set new Northwest Division marks for field goals (20) in a three-overtime game against Fergus Falls and (19) in a regulation game against Rainy River.

Two other marks included a record-tying single game field goal percentage by Carriere (100 per cent, 8-for-8); and a new one-game team mark with 53 loose ball recoveries against Winnipeg.

Northmen Name Captains For 1980 MJCAA Football Season

New Northland community college football coach John Helley has announced that Jeff Reese, Tony Smith, Duane Kjono and Jim McCue will serve as captains for the Northmen during the 1980 Minnesota junior college athletic association (MJCAA) football season.

Reese, from Hallock, will serve as Northland's defensive captain; Smith, Inkster, Mich., will be the offensive captain; Kjono, Mahnomen, and McCue, Deer Park, N.Y., will serve as captains of the specialty teams.

All four were freshmen members of the 1979 Northland football team that finished the season with a 3-6 record. Head coach Irv Smith resigned at the end of the season and was succeeded by Helley, a native of Plummer, and an assistant coach under Smith last fall.

Game, Fish Fund Aided In Senate

Times Sports Editor

It might not be as bad as first feared. Sportsmen and conservationists who were startled to hear that committee action in the Minnesota House of Representatives threatened to strip nearly $1½ million from the state game and fish fund will be relieved to hear that the Senate version of the bills appear far more favorable to the state wildlife programs.

In fact, the senate action was termed "just fine" by Bob Farmes, Department of Natural Resources regional wildlife supervisor.

House committee action had approved language to transfer $700,000 from the game and fish fund to the general fund because of a supposed surplus in the game and fish fund, and had recommended an appropriation of $730,000 from the game and fish fund to the White Earth and Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians for an agreement allowing persons who are not members of the Minnesota Chippewa Tribe to hunt, fish, trap or take minnows on the reservation. That would replace the current method requiring those who wish to hunt or fish on the reservation to pay an extra fee when they purchase their hunting or fishing license.

Well, the Senate action calls for the White Earth and Leech Lake money to come from the state's general fund instead of the game and fish fund, and the Senate action also calls for retaining the current system for funding DNR enforcement personnel which calls for 60 per cent of the money to come from the game and fish fund and 40 per cent from the general fund since many of the duties are related to non-wildlife matters. The House version of the bill called for the entire amount to come from the game and fish fund.

A joint committee compromise is likely before the matters reach the House and Senate for voting.

CHRIS NELSON, 9-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Rick Nelson, shows his state championship trophy earned in the 1980 Minnesota Elks hoop shoot free throw shooting contest. Chris won school, area, district and state contests and participated at the regional level earlier this month at Iowa City, Ia.

Elks Free Throw Contest . . .

Chris Nelson Is State Champion

Nine-year-old Chris Nelson, a fourth grade student at Northrop elementary school in Thief River Falls was a state champion this year in the Elks hoop shoot free throw shooting basketball contest.

Chris began the nation-wide competition as the 9-year-old winner at Northrop by making seven of 10 free throws. He won the Thief River Falls area contest in the Lincoln high school gym by making 12 of 25 free throws; won a district title at Eveleth by making 16 of 25 free throws; and earned the state championship trophy at the Met Sports Center in Bloomington by making 20 of 25 free throws. Later that day he was part of a halftime program during a Minnesota Fillies vs. Iowa Cornets women's professional basketball game.

Only Thief River Falls state champion in the eight-year-old history of the hoop shoot contest, Chris advanced to the regional level earlier this month at Iowa City, Ia., where his victory string was snapped, even though he still made 17 of 25 free throws. The regional winner moved on the national finals at Indianapolis, Ind.

Chris, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rick Nelson of Thief River Falls, earned medals at the area and district competition, a trophy at the state level and a plaque at the regional level. This was his second contest try; a year ago he failed to make it past the Northrop school competition.

Boat Owners Reminded To Renew License

It's time for Minnesota boat owners to send their license fees and renewal applications in to the Department of Natural Resources.

Notices have been sent out by the DNR's license center to boat owners whose licenses expired in 1979. These licenses must be renewed before the boat can legally be placed in public waters.

"Instead of waiting until just before the opening of the fishing season," said Robert Wells, DNR license supervisor, "owners should have their licenses renewed now so they can put the new decal on the boat when they are ready to use it."

Every spring there is a flood of renewal applications to process just before the fishing opener.

"The smart thing to do is to send the renewal in now so the boat is ready to go this spring," said Wells.

DNR Warns Of Springtime Ice Danger In State

Recent warm weather has caused many Minnesota rivers to begin flowing and has further deteriorated the ice conditions on the state's lakes. This can be a potential problem — especially to children, late season ice fishermen and early season canoeists according to the Department of Natural Resources.

Kim Elverum, boat and water safety coordinator for the DNR, noted that the ice conditions were extremely unpredictable throughout the winter because of the temperature fluctuations, keeping the ice from freezing to its usual thickness on many lakes. A record 14 persons died this winter in ice related accidents.

"Furthermore," said Elverum, "the spring runoff on rivers and streams attracts whitewater canoeists and rafters. Each year in the United States canoeists die in whitewater accidents in the cold, fast waters of the spring runoff.

"Whitewater canoeing is not for the beginner. The cold, fast water of a spring runoff increases the difficulty of avoiding objects and can capsize even the best canoeist. It is essential that proper training be received and that a personal flotation device (life preserver) be worn before any whitewater attempts are made."

Elverum offered the following advice to help prevent water accidents this spring:

+ Stay off the ice if at all possible.

+ Parents should warn their children about the hazards of thin ice and nearby swoolen rivers or streams.

+ Late-season ice fishermen should check locally before heading out on the lake. Even then, it should be noted that ice conditions can vary from place to place on the same body of water.

Pavelich Gives Gold Medal To Hall Of Fame

Roger Godin, executive director of the United States hockey hall of fame, announced that Olympic hockey team member Mark Pavelich of Eveleth has donated his Olympic gold medal to the U.S. hockey hall of fame, located in Eveleth. This announcement came during a televised interview with Godin at the Minnesota state high school hockey tournament held recently in Minneapolis.

The 22-year-old Pavelich kept such a low profile at the games in Lake Placid, he was dubbed "Mr. Incognito" by newswriters. As a former UMD centerman, he established three scoring records in his junior year: most goals (31), most assists (48) and most points (79) in leading the Bulldogs to their best season ever — third in the WCHA. Pavelich lettered three years at UMD, and was an all-American and all-WCHA selection this past season, before he joined the Olympic hockey team.

Godin accepted the medal on behalf of the U.S. hockey hall of fame. According to Godin, the medal is valuable not only because of its great historical significance, but because it was earned and donated by an Eveleth native, demonstrating, once again, Eveleth's depth of involvement in hockey.

Wetlands Tax Credit Bill Passed By Legislature

As a result of a bill passed by the 1979 Legislature, a property tax exemption and a property tax credit was created for wetlands in Minnesota.

Laws of 1979, Chapter 303, Article II, Section 5 exempts wetlands from property taxation, effective with the 1980 assessment.

"Wetlands," as defined by the Legislature, means land which is mostly under water; produces little if any income; has no use except for wildlife or water conservation purposes; and is preserved in its natural condition, drainage of which would be lawful, feasible and practical and would provide land suitable for the production of livestock, dairy animals, poultry, fruit, vegetables, forage and grains, except wild rice.

Also included in the definition of wetlands is adjacent land which is not suitable for agricultural purposes due to the presence of wetlands.

The exemption is not intended to grant the public any additional or greater right of access to the wetlands or diminish any right of ownership to the wetlands.

Section 8 calls for a state paid wetlands credit in addition to the exemption granted by Section 5. The county auditor is to reduce the property tax liability of each owner of wetlands exempt from property taxation by an amount equal to three-fourths of one percent of the average estimated market value of an acre of tillable land in the township or city in which the qualifying wetland is located, multiplied by the number of acres of wetlands owned. Any excess of credit over tax liability is not to be paid to the property owner.

The county auditor is to submit to the commissioner of revenue, as part of the abstracts of tax lists, the total amount of wetlands credits allowed and the total amount of revenue lost as a result of the wetlands exemption.

Amount of revenue lost as a result of the exemption is to be computed each year by applying the current mill rates of the taxing jurisdictions in which the wetland are located to the 1979 assessed valuation of the wetlands. The revenue lost as a result of the exemption is to be replaced by the state. However, payment to the county for lost revenue is not to be less than the revenue which would have been received in taxes if the wetlands had an assessed value of $20 per acre. In addition, the state is to reimburse the county for the wetlands credits.

In order for any property owner to have his wetlands exempted and receive the wetland credit he must agree not to drain the wetlands during the year for which he receives the credit.

The amount of the wetlands credit and the tax that would have been due but for the exemption is to be stated on the property tax statement of those individuals receiving the exemption and credit. This section is to be effective for taxes levied in 1980, payable in 1981 and later years.

The precedent-setting action of granting an exemption and then giving the taxpayer a credit for the exemption indicates the importance that the legislature has attached to the preservation of Minnesota's wetlands.

Generally, when people talk about preserving wetlands, the first thing that comes to mind is preserving habitat for wildlife, especially waterfowl. Although this is the reason most often cited for preserving wetlands, there are other reasons which are just as important, but not as obvious. In February of 1979, the U.S. general accounting office (GAO) released a report to the U.S. Congress concerning programs for wetland preservation. The following is an excerpt from that report:

"In the past, the value of wetlands has relied principally on the benefits of preserving fish and wildlife habitats. Only recently have studies examined the benefits of flood control, ground water recharge and pollution and sediment control. These have shown that in some cases benefits from these wetland values have dwarfed those from fish and wildlife values."

A number of questions have arisen regarding the administration and implementation of the law. One of the first questions that arises is whether every wetland qualifies for the exemption and credit. Generally speaking, the exemption and credit is intended to apply to the lands that assessors have classified as "wet wasteland" in their field records. It has been classified as waste because of standing water during most of the year, especially in the growing season. It would include marshes, sloughs and swamps usually not cropped, hayed or grazed.

Lands that are flooded or waterlogged only for a short time during the spring, or after an unusually wet period, would not qualify since these lands are normally farmed and do have a use other than for "wildlife or water conservation purposes".

Wetlands that qualify for the credit and exemption may dry up, but this would have no effect on the exemption or credit unless the property owner took steps to permanently drain the wetlands.

The phrase. . . "drainage of which would be lawful, feasible and practical. . ." raises the question as to what is meant by "lawful". Do lands enrolled in a federal or state water bank program qualify for the exemption and credit? Do lands where the U.S. fish and Wildlife Service has an easement qualify? Or, lands where the state Department of Natural Resources has a restrictive ordinance prohibiting drainage without a permit? Or, lands where there is inadequate access for drainage? All of these lands would qualify for the exemption and credit because for purposes of this law their drainage would be considered lawful.

For the purposes of this law, the only lands which would be unlawful to drain would be those where the individual does not have legal title or where the waters are meandered waters.

Whether drainage of lands is practical and feasible is a matter of judgment for the assessor. One of the things the assessor can examine is whether drainage of wetlands in this area is a common practice. If it is common for farmers in this area to drain wetlands and put them to agricultural use, then it can be assumed that drainage is practical and feasible.

In very general terms, if a line is drawn from the northwest corner of the state to the southeast corner, wetlands that are south of this line are the ones that are typically drained because current agricultural and economic conditions make it practical. However, this is not to say that there are not wetlands north of the line that are going to qualify for the exemption and credit because they are not practical to drain. Rather, when looking at wetlands north of this line, assessors are going to have to examine what use the land would be put to if drained and if current agricultural and economic conditions make it practical.

A question that also arisen as to whether man-made wetlands, sometimes referred to as "dynamite potholes" qualify for the exemption and credit. Such man-made wetlands would not qualify since the law says wetlands means land which is. . . "preserved in its natural condition. . .". Man-made wetlands are not lands preserved in their natural condition and therefore would not be eligible. However, wetlands which have been drained and farmed in the past and are now restored to their original condition are eligible for the exemption and credit. It may take a few years before a wetland is restored to its original condition and therefore the assessor is going to have to review each instance of a restored wetland on an individual basis to determine when the exemption and credit take effect.

There must be at least one acre of wetland before the exemption and credit can be extended to a property. An individual may have a number of wetlands that are less than one acre on a particular parcel. As long as all the wetlands together total more than one acre on the parcel, the exemption and credit can be extended to the wetlands on the parcel.

The law does not require that the property owner make application to the assessor for the exemption and credit, but it does require that the owner agree not to drain the wetlands during the year for which he or she receives the credit. Therefore, the department is suggesting that assessors mail an agreement to each property owner entitled to the exemption and credit.

Application forms for the wetlands credit will be available at the county assessor's office and have to filled out by July 1, 1980, in order to receive wetlands credit in 1981.

Events will be held in four divisions: masters, hunters, juniors (14-18) and Peewee (under 14).

Competition will be held from 6:30 - 8 p.m. Trophies will be awarded in all eight events.

If interested you may contact the Minnesota waterfowl association office (612)338-6761.

Whitefish, Tullibees

In the Deer River and Bena area this is the season for the whitefish and tullibee. They are excellent eating at this time of year. The bait being used are mousies and small pale blue or white jigs. A tear drop hook with wax worms is a good tullibee biat.

Perch and crappies are also being taken.

The state record elpout (14 pounds) was taken from Deer Lake recently by Leonard Lundeen of Duluth and was just three ounces short of the world record.

If you attend the Northwest Sports show in Minneapolis here are some features to look for:

+ Catch and Keep'em trout pond — always a favorite of the crowd.

+ Roland Martin fishing clinics.

+ Logrolling and lumberjack competition with Northwoods champions.

+ Bob Munden — Guiness record holder for the fastest gun draw.

+ George Bruno and his sway pole act performed 90 feet above the ground without special safety equipment.

+ George Galicz and his falcons that are released into the auditorium and perform and return on command.

+ Minnesota farmer-sportsman and Frank Blair junior conservationist presentation.

+ Marv Koep, the fisherman's fisherman from Nisswa, has a new "Battery Pal" which mounts near the controls and offers overload protection while distributing power to electric motors, depth finders and other boat accessories.

+ Fuzz Lepage — Missouri State Trooper turned bush pilot from Warroad.

Twins Plan 1980 Summer Clinic Dates

Signs of spring will soon appear — chirping birds, green grass and flowers, kites flapping in the wind and the crack of a bat. Yes, it will soon be baseball season throughout the Upper Midwest.

For thousands of boys and girls, baseball season means free instruction at a Minnesota Twins baseball clinic. Some 46 clinics will be conducted this year in Minnesota, Iowa and Wisconsin between April 16 and August 16. At each clinic, open to youngsters, ages 8 to 18, will last 1½ to 2 hours.

Angelo Guiliani, the clinic director, has just announced he'll have a new assistant this year: Glenn Gostick, a former University of Minnesota assistant baseball coach, along with Bill Kane, Minnesota Twins scout. Angie, who is a Twins scout and a former major league catcher, and his staff, will teach the fundamentals of baseball. Coaches and parents are invited to the clinics.

All young baseball enthusiasts are asked to bring their own gloves to the clinics since they will have an opportunity to practice the techniques to be demonstrated. The clinics are approved by state high school board of control. Attendance at the 1979 clinics totaled 11,748.

Census Info To Be Kept Confidential

What's the best kept secret in the U.S.? Census information; data collected during the 1980 census, which begins April 1, will be kept confidential for 72 years and permanently stored at the National Archives.

Federal law requires everyone to answer the census. However, the same law assures that every person's answers to the census are confidential. Only census bureau employees, sworn to secrecy, may see the individual census answers which contain no individual names, addresses or social security numbers.

There has never been a proven case of a census employee divulging personal information from a census. Not even another federal agency or the President can see individual census answers, whatever the purpose. Individuals may obtain facts reported about themselves in the population census from microfilm records, with proof of identification.

Census data directly influences decisions on matters of national and local importance, such as education, employment, social security, the need for health services and energy, and international relations.

Used as the official government measure for employment and unemployment, an accurate census count is necessary to insure the correct allocation of monies for federal programs such as CETA (comprehensive employment and training act).

Minorities are directly affected by the government's formula-based job distribution plans. If blacks, Hispanics, Indians and others neglect to file census reports, unemployment and low-income statistical figures are drastically altered, decreasing the availability of positions in the government-subsidized job pool.

Federal and state programs fail to support the actual number of persons in need of a job or social services if statistics used for funding reveal inaccurate totals. Therefore, it is necessary for all individuals to file census statements to determine proper funding allocations.

The census will provide data on poverty, useful for allocating federal funds. The census is expected to show a continuing increase in the proportion of poor persons living in families maintained by women, and a decline in the proportion of the poor residing in the South.

By the time the last American is counted sometime during the summer, the bureau of the census will have reached an estimated 222 million U.S. residents and 86 million housing units, and gathered more than three billion answers.

Questions will be asked regarding age, ethnic origin, household membership, sex and marital status. Households were to receive questionnaires in the mail on March 28, and should return the forms during the first week of April.

Ten per cent of the U.S. population, primarily those in sparsely settled areas, will be instructed to keep their completed questionnaires until census takers collect the forms. A portion of the population will be requested to complete an extended version of the census. The basic questionnaire distributed to four out of five households contains 19 questions.

Every one per cent of the population that cooperates with the request to mail back the completed questionnaires will save taxpayers $2 million in follow-up costs.

Constitutional purpose of the population count has not changed since the first census in 1970: to provide the basis for fair apportionment among the states of seats in the House of Representatives. By law, the census bureau must report the state population counts to the President by Jan. 1, 1981.

President Carter states, "The census has become an invaluable tool, providing all Americans with vital, nonpersonalized facts and figures about our constantly changing society. This information forms the basis for countless decisions made by government, industry, labor, academia, the communications industry and many others."

The 1980 census will provide an estimated 300,000 pages of statistical information about more geographic areas than any prior census. Gathered by a temporary work force of approximately 270,000, the findings are necessary in order to address the needs of the nation's people, and in planning and managing government on the federal, state and local levels.

This year's counts will spell out in great detail the changes in U.S. society during the past decade. The number of unmarried couples sharing a household has more than doubled in 10 years. Half of all American women 16 years old and over — 42 million — were in the labor force during the 1978, the first time in U.S. history, according to the census bureau estimates.

Free Statewide Legal Service Starts April 1

Minnesota State Bar association (MSBA) announces that on April 1 a free statewide legal information service will become available to Minnesotans residing outside the Twin Cities area dialing toll-free 1-800-652-9728. The caller can ask the operator to play one or more of over 60 different tapes on any specific subject available in which they are interested.

The program known as TEL-LAW is already operational in several other states, but the MSBA project initiated by the Hennepin county bar association, is specifically directed to legal questions and areas of the law most common to Minnesota as related to the most current regulations and statutes.

Literature describing the TEL-LAW project along with a listing of the subjects available is being furnished to service organizations throughout the state, including senior citizen groups, hospitals, clubs and fraternal associations . . . and all such groups that feel such a service will be helpful.

The Minnesota Better Business Bureau has endorsed the project and has indicated that plans are being developed to refer Bureau callers — when appropriate — to specific TEL-LAW subjects.

The TEL-LAW questions and answers have been developed by attorneys in all fields of practice, using experts in particular areas such as real estate, marriage dissolution, bankruptcy, consumer rights . . . and hundreds of other topics with which people deal every day . . . and with which they frequently need direction and guidance.

In an effort to avoid complex legal language and terminology, the scripts have been edited by public information specialists to assure simplicity and understandability.

WIN Slices $2 Million Off Welfare Costs

Work incentive (WIN) program reduced state welfare payments an estimated $2 million during the first quarter of fiscal year 1980, the Minnesota department of economic security reported recently.

WIN program costs were $1,614,456 for the same period, Oct. 1 through Dec. 31, 1979.

Public expenditure for medicaid and food stamp programs were also lowered due to grant reductions to WIN participants. In addition, the state and federal governments gained revenue through income taxes paid by employed WIN registrants.

WIN is a federal program which assists persons receiving aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) become gainfully employed, reducing or eliminating their dependence on public welfare. There were 17,312 individuals classified as WIN registrants in Minnesota as of Dec. 31.

Since Oct. 1, 1979, 1,754 persons in the program entered permanent employment at an average starting wage of $4 per hour. In addition, 221 participants received basic education or vocational classroom training, 359 were assigned to non-WIN funded training programs, 87 were in non-WIN subsidized employment, 89 were in on-the-job training programs and 30 participated in public service employment.

Although about half of the WIN registrants enter clerical and service employment, many are employed in the professional, technical, managerial, sales, machine trades and motor freight transportation fields.

Department of economic security provides counseling and placement services, refers registrants to training programs and develops job openings. Department of public welfare makes eligibility determinations and provides supportive services, including financial assistance with transportation, medical and child care.

Authorized by amendments to the social security act, WIN is a joint effort of the U.S. department of labor and department of health and human services. In Minnesota the WIN program is jointly operated by the Minnesota department of economic security, through more than 100 job service offices, and the Minnesota department of public welfare, through county welfare agencies.

Labor Dep't. Cuts Burden On Benefit Plans

Department of labor has taken action to reduce the paperwork burden on insured employee benefit plans by modifying the reporting of insurance information required under the employee retirement income security act (ERISA).

In a document published March 4 in the Federal register, the department announced that the annual return-report forms (5500 series) have been modified to require insurance commission and fee information that is useful to the department's enforcement of ERISA, but in a manner more compatible with insurance company recordkeeping systems.

In a second action, the department issued a regulation the same day providing that plans whose benefits are insured by certain types of insurance companies do not have to file the annual financial report of the insurance company. Instead, they must file the report to the department only upon request.

Both final actions have been adopted as they were proposed June 22, 1979. They are applicable beginning with annual reports filed for the 1979 plan year, which begin to be due July 31, 1980.

Marv Hanson, Braun, Stumpf Are Endorsed

Sen. Marv Hanson, Art Braun of Greenbush and LeRoy Stumpf of Plummer received endorsement for District 1 offices at the DFL nominating convention held Friday evening at Greenbush, according to Earl Anderson of Stephen, Marshall county DFL chairman.

Sen. Hanson was a unanimous selection as a candidate for reelection to the state senate from District 1.

Braun, a former state representative who lost by 11 votes to Rep. Myron Nysether of Ross in the last election, won a first ballot victory over Norma Hanson of Goodridge who was also seeking the District 1A endorsement. Sixty per cent of the voting delegates were needed for endorsement, Anderson said, and both candidates had indicated in advance they would support the other if endorsed.

In a contest which reportedly lasted until 1 a.m., Stumpf emerged with the endorsement in an extremely close race with Jim Kremer of Thief River Falls for representative from House District 1B. Stumpf is a farmer and auctioneer.

Kremer, according to Anderson, presented the most forceful speech to the nominating convention — the largest in the history of the district with 292 voting delegates on hand — and held close to 90 delegates throughout the evening. Kremer has a background in education and administration and has been active in pro-life organizations.

Kenneth Price of Stephen was elected to succeed Grant Satre of Grygla as the District I chairman and Jan Anderson of Stephen was reelected to serve as associate chairman. Lynda Meyers of Warroad was elected to succeed Bobbi Corbid of Oklee as secretary and Al Nichols of Thief River Falls was elected treasurer to succeed Keith Kapphahn of Greenbush.

Arbitrator To Withdraw, Hearing Date In Limbo

Another set-back in the potential settlement of School District 564's contract with its instructional staff took place early this week when John W. Boyer Jr., arbitrator selected to hear final positions of the school district and teachers, withdrew from the proceedings.

Boyer, a professor of business administration at the University of Minnesota Duluth campus, is acknowledged to be among the top arbitrators in the state. He has reportedly had a very full schedule this year and because of ill health had been advised by his doctor to withdraw from further activity.

Contacted by the Times this morning, Boyer affirmed that he is clearing out his entire April schedule, including the Thief River Falls hearing, due to severe exhaustion and complications of a thyroid condition which may require surgery. He didn't consider it fair to either party in Thief River Falls, he said, to indefinitely postpone the hearing, although that alternative had been suggested by both sides.

The arbitration hearing had been set for April 18. Boyer said he requested the executive secretary of the public employees relations board to expedite the submission of another list of seven potential arbitrators from which the local district and faculty could make a selection. Bob Reed, director of negotiations research for the Minnesota Education association, told the Times Tuesday that he expected the list to be received and a decision made late this week or early next week.

Although that portion of the process may be completed soon, it is considered unlikely that an arbitrator would be selected who could adapt his schedule to the April 18 hearing date. It is likely, however, as Boyer indicated to the Times, that a newly selected arbitrator would be able to hear the final positions sooner than Boyer would himself at some indefinite future date.

In a letter being drafted by Boyer for submission to the parties involved, he indicates his regret at having to withdraw and emphasizes that his health and doctor's advice are the only factors involved with his decision. In the letter he will also state he believes it would be grossly inappropriate for him to further delay the proceedings by moving them to an indeterminate future date.

Role of the arbitrator in the hearing process is to hear the

Hearing On RR Crossings Set Here April 16

Public hearing will be conducted Wednesday, April 16, to determine whether funds should be allocated to install warning signs at railroad crossings in Beltrami, Clay, Clearwater, Marshall, Norman, Pennington, Polk, Red Lake and Roseau counties, according to Gordon Boldt, in charge of railroad operations for the Minnesota department of transportation (Mn-DOT).

Testimony on the proposed sign installation will be heard by a state hearing examiner at 10 a.m. at the Pennington county court house, trunk highway 32 and First street, Thief River Falls.

A Mn-DOT study indicates that additional advance warning signs should be installed at the main Burlington Northern, Inc. rail crossings with county, city and township roads on routes from Dugdale to Warroad via Thief River Falls and Dale to Crookston via Fertile and on main Soo Line Railroad county routes from Thief River Falls to Oslo via Warren and Plummer to Wilton via Gully.

Cost of the signs and installation would be funded by 90 per cent federal and 10 per cent state funds. Mn-DOT has notified interested persons of the hearing.

After the hearing examiner's report is issued, exceptions may be filed by parties to the proceedings. Mn-DOT issues the final order adopting, amending or rejecting the report.

ENDORSED by the District I DFL party at its endorsing convention in Greenbush Friday evening were (left to right) Sen. Marv Hanson of Hallock, incumbent senator from District I; Art Braun, Greenbush, former state representative, endorsed for House District 1A; and LeRoy Stumpf, Plummer, endorsed for House District 1B. Also seeking endorsement were Norma Hanson of Goodridge in District 1A and Jim Kremer of Thief River Falls in District 1B.

Fashion School Runway To Business Career

DOWNTOWN MINNEAPOLIS is the setting for school and job activities of Wendy Nelson (left) and Tammy Trudeau, 1979 graduates of Lincoln high school. Wendy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Nelson of Thief River Falls, and Tammy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Trudeau formerly of Thief River Falls, were both enrolled in a nine-month program at Lowthian fashion and modeling school. Part-time employment in a retail store is part of the program and both girls were placed in Donaldson's downtown department store. They are pictured on a Nicollet Mall skyway that takes them from school to work.

by Kim Blaeser

What does Loni Anderson of "WKRP in Cincinnati" have in common with former Thief River Falls residents Tammy Trudeau and Wendy Nelson? Lowthian fashion and modeling school in Minneapolis.

Trudeau and Nelson, 1979 graduates of Lincoln high school, were enrolled in a nine-month fashion merchandising course at Lowthian, the school whose graduates in the 1960's included the then-brunette Anderson, a Roseville native. The goals of Tammy and Wendy are not stardom or even modeling, but their curriculum still includes equal preparation for the glamorous as well as the business-related fashion careers.

Tammy is the daughter of Dick and Delores Trudeau who were Thief River Falls residents until September of 1979. The oldest of four children, while at Lincoln high school Tammy was active in concert choir, Prowlins, synchronized swimming and drama. Talking about why she chose the Lowthian program for career preparation she says, "I like working with people, I'm interested in fashion, and I wanted to work in business."

One of three daughters of Raymond and Jean Nelson of Thief River Falls, Wendy says, "I love clothes, and I've always been interested in fashion and fashion merchandising." While at Lincoln she participated in Prowlins, DECA and VICA clubs and the color guard.

Both girls have been attending the fashion school since October and will graduate in May. Their courses cover management and fashion retailing skills as well as personal development and modeling instruction. Typical course titles include salesmanship, fashion drawing, store layout, principles of buying, professional makeup, wardrobe, fashion modeling and visual poise.

"It's a business school," says Wendy, "and it's treated like a business. You're expected to dress like you would for a retail position and call in when you're sick. It's not like any other college atmosphere. They try to teach you a professional attitude and give you a professional appearance."

Part of learning the retail business, at least for Lowthian students, is working in the business. All students are required to have part-time jobs which they fill at least two hours a day. Nelson and Trudeau were both placed by the school in Donaldson's department store in downtown Minneapolis and Tammy also holds a second part-time job in a small shop, The Limited. By getting experience in both a department store and a boutique she hopes to have a better idea of where she would like to work when she graduates.

Participation in a style show is another of the requirements of the fashion school curriculum. The girls plan and coordinate all parts of a show including choosing their own clothes, writing the commentray and modeling in the show.

In the personal development portion of the program Tammy and Wendy have a

Kern To Hold Badger Meet

Dr. James Kern of Winona state university will conduct an early childhood development workshop April 16 at the VFW club rooms in Badger. The all-day seminar to begin at 9:30 a.m. will have a noon luncheon served at St. Mary's Catholic church.

Set Holy Week Services At St. Bernard's

Holy week at St. Bernard's Catholic church began Sunday with a "procession of the faithful" carrying palms and singing in praise of Christ as King, reenacting Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem, according to Rev. James Bernauer, pastor.

The story of Christ's suffering and death was read from Luke's account in four-part narration. Order of service for Holy Week follows the form of worship in use for centuries in the church, but since Vatican council II, they have been shortened and updated, with more participation by the laity, Rev. Bernauer said.

Services commemorating the Lord's last supper will be conducted Thursday at 5:30 p.m. with the principal mass at 8 p.m. Sacrament of reconciliation will be available one hour before each mass and also 11 a.m. to noon. From 9:30 p.m. to midnight the parishioners are invited to honor Christ's abiding presence in the sacrament of the Holy Eucharist by holding a night vigil.

There will be the Lord's last supper masses Holy Thursday at 5 p.m. at St. Anne's, Goodridge and at 7:30 p.m. at St. Clement's, Grygla.

Commemoration of the Lord's suffering and death will be observed Friday in an ecumenical service at Trinity Lutheran church at 1 p.m. To accommodate parishioners from the city, and visitors, St. Bernard's church will conduct services at 2:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. Both will be communion services with reading of John's Gospel, solemn intercession for the world and veneration of the cross, Rev. Bernauer said.

This year's Easter vigil, April 5, is scheduled for 8:30 p.m. Saturday. A large Easter candle, symbol of Christ, the "Light of the world", is lit. Old testament prophecies about the universal need for salvation and the new life of grace, form the introduction to the blessing of water for baptism and for the congregation's renewal of its baptismal vows. This year adults and the children will be baptized and confirmed. This vigil service is concluded with an anticipated celebration of the resurrection mass and communion, which fulfills Easter Sunday worship.

Easter morning festive masses will be at 7, 8:30, 10:15 and 11:30 a.m. Everyone is welcome to all services.

Next Parenting Series Starts On April 15th

Parenting education program is offering a series of couple communication classes beginning April 15. The group will be limited to seven couples and the class will meet on April 15, 22, 29 and May 6 from 7 to 10 p.m. Cost is $15 per couple to cover the materials and Mark and Peggy Johaningsmeir will lead the sessions.

This is a course which was developed in Minnesota about 10 years ago. Since then over 60,000 couples in North America, Europe and Australia have taken part. Program has received awards and praise from organizations dedicated to marriage and family enrichment.

"Most important recommendations come from the participants. They find that this four-week course is a positive experience. It helps couples to build on their strengths and find greater satisfaction in their relationships. It is not a place for therapy or rescuing marriages that are falling apart," the instructors emphasize.

"We will be sharing some basic ideas about communicaton and learning together some skills which free a person to share more clearly and openly. A couple's privacy will always be respected. Each person will receive a copy of "Talking together" which is necessary for class preparation and the learning sessions," the Johaningsmeirs added.

Pre-register by April 9 by contacting adult education, AVTI, 681-5424.

Arbitrator To Withdraw From School Hearing

final positions presented by School District 564 and its representatives and by the Thief River Falls Education association and its representatives, and to reach a determination on all items at impasse between the two parties.

Decision of the arbitrator is binding on the teachers represented by the education association but not binding on the school district. Should the school district not accept the arbitration decision, teachers have the right to strike under present state law.

In telephone conversations Tuesday with John Roszak, chief negotiator for the school district, and Bob Reed of the Minnesota Education association, the Times received concensus on the basic issues at impasse which will be heard in arbitration proceedings.

Roszak indicated that the basic issue is economic and involves faculty salary schedule, mileage for personal car used in school-related travel, eligibility for recipients for severance pay, extra-curricular salaries, school district's contribution to the faculty's health insurance premium, salary for assistant to the principal, salary for Title I and Title IV directors and pay for emergency substitutes.

The faculty also wants language in the contract which would limit class size — language which is opposed by the school district. The district seeks a contract language change which would facilitate transfer of faculty from one position to another in the district — language opposed by the teacher group.

Contract in question is for the current school year (1979-1980) and next year (1980-1981). Teachers are employed this year under continuation of the 1978-79 contract, advancing one step on the experience level of that contract where such an increment is provided.

According to Roszak, the final offer of the school district in the general salary schedule for 1979-1980 is as follows: Starting salary of $10,518 for a teacher with bachelor's degree and no experience to a maximum of $16,655 for a bachelor's degree with 20 years of experience. Starting pay proposed for a master's degree teacher with no experience is $12,259 with increments to a maximum of $18,396 at the 20-year experience level.

For the second year of the two-year contract (1980-1981) the bachelor's degree figures are proposed at $11,109 and $17,555 and the master's degree figures at $12,928 and $19,382.

As is the case in the existing contract, the board proposes continuation of providing annual experience increments from the first through 15th year, withholding the final increment until the 20th year.

The faculty's final position calls for a salary schedule of 16 steps with the maximum to be paid in the 16th year rather than the 20th. That final proposal requests the following salary figures for 1979-1980:

First year teacher with bachelor's degree, $10,768 to a maximum of $16,989 for a bachelor's degree with 16 years of experience. First year teacher with a master's degree, $12,650 to a maximum of $18,872 with 16 years of experience.

For the second year of the contract (1980-1981) the bachelor's degree figures are proposed to increase to $11,576 and $18,263 and the master's degree figures from $13,599 to $20,287.

Existing salary schedule (1977-1978-1979) starts teachers with a bachelor's degree at $10,040 with a maximum of $15,841 at the 20-year level. Master's degree teachers would start at $11,702 with no experience, increasing to $17,503 at the 20-year level.

How To Take The Rub Out Of Driving Costs

Here's a money-saving note for motorists, from driving experts. They say you can take some of the rub out of the costs of driving — by working to overcome friction.

This sounds hard to believe. But once you get a car moving, if you're not going uphill, you wouldn't need any gasoline at all — if it weren't for friction. At fifty-five miles an hour, thirty-eight percent of the work energy of your gasoline goes to overcome friction between the car and the air. That's according to some scientific calculations.

You can help reduce such friction by driving with your windows closed — or open only a crack. That cuts down air turbulence. Even if you have to turn on the air-conditioning, you're likely to save fuel if you have a modern, efficient system. Also, if you can, avoid carrying things on the roof of your car. That increases air resistance and causes your engine to guzzle more gas than it normally would.

Twenty percent of your car's friction is inside the engine. Here you can get help from a synthetic engine oil like Mobil 1. It's assembled from selected molecules that are more slippery than those in conventional oil. So this synthetic enables the average car to go ten extra miles per tankful of gasoline. The top three test cars averaged twenty-seven extra miles.

Tires contribute four percent of your car's friction. You can minimize tire friction by using radials, and keeping them inflated up to recommendations. A recent survey found that four out of five tires were underinflated. That can cost you a mile a gallon.

PROFESSIONAL MAKEUP, fashion modeling, hair care and hairstyling and wardrobe are among the personal development classes included in the nine-month fashion merchandising curriculum of Tammy Trudeau (left) and Wendy Nelson. The former Thief River Falls residents are currently attending Lowthian fashion school in Minneapolis. After graduation Trudeau hopes to work in retail management or display, and Nelson as a sales representative is cosmetic consulting and demonstration. Photo above is a mirror image.

Fashion School Is Runway To Future Career

chance to learn various modeling and makeup techniques, participate in a photo session with a professional photographer and put together a modeling portfolio. Wendy also belongs to the school's extra-curricular "Models '80" organization where she gets additional experience and instruction in modeling. When metropolitan organizations or businesses contact the school for models, it is students from "Models '80" who are sent out.

One of the highlights of the Thief River Falls students involvement with the fashion school will be a week-long field study trip to New York City in May. Tammy and Wendy will stay with their class at the Sheraton in New York, in the heart of the clothing district; they will tour fur factories, clothing manufacturers, cosmetic corporations, showrooms, museums and galleries; and will visit the major points of interest in New York and attend a Broadway show. Wendy also has plans to participate in a spring trip to Paris for a picture of the foreign fashion scene.

Attendance at the fashion school has been the introduction for both Tammy and Wendy to the metropolitan life. The school often receives invitations for its students to attend local events such as the recent Picasso art show, and both girls agree, "There is always something to do." Tammy says, "The variety of people is fantastic and there is always some activity — bike riding, frisbee, roller skating. The city is exciting. Everything is fast. You're always moving and always thinking."

Both girls are making tentative plans for after their May graduation. Tammy would like to go into retail management of a small shop where she can put to use the variety of skills she is learning or into display. Wendy wants to work in cosmetic consulting and demonstration as a sales representative. Both look forward to careers which will involve some travel. They may leave television and runway ramps to other Lowthian graduates, but as Tammy says, "Visual poise, modeling skills and a professional appearance are important anytime you deal with the public."

Landscaping Meeting Set For Tuesday

Homeowners interested in learning more about basic principles of landscaping their home as well as recommended species of trees and shrubs for northwestern Minnesota are invited to attend a meeting on Tuesday at 8 p.m. in the courthouse meeting room in Thief River Falls.

Offered by the county extension service, the meeting will feature a telelecture program by University of Minnesota extension horticulturists Jane McKinnon, and discussion by county extension director Terry Courneya.

Colored slides will be used to show landscaping principles and how trees and shrubs can be used to beautify the home setting. The discussion will include pictures and names of various kinds of trees and shrubs that are hardy in northwest Minnesota and relatively free of disease and insect problems.

There is no charge for the meeting and the public is invited.

Schools Close This Friday

Thief River Falls schools will be closed on Friday of this week only, although Northland community college classes will not on either Friday or Monday, April 7. Northland faculty will have duty day both Friday and Monday.

The public schools had originally scheduled Thursday of this week and Monday of next week as holidays, but cancelation of school due to weather earlier this year resulted in a need to use the two days as class days to complete the school term on schedule.

CROWD PLEASER at the Lincoln high school musical "Where's Charley" was Brian Ranum in the role of Mr. Spettigue. Civil Defense Directors Aid Flood Victims

Flash flooding in the southeastern portion of the state caught a number of people unprepared when snow-plugged ditches and small streams overflowed, according to Commissioner John P. Sopsic of the Minnesota department of public safety.

Numerous calls were received by the division of emergency services from homeowners requesting information on where to secure sandbags and sand.

Division recommends that homeowners who are subject to localized flash flooding locate a source of both sandbags and sand in their own community. If they need assistance they are urged to contact their municipal or county civil defense director.

13 Soft Drink Companies Join In Recycling

MSD Recycle is a joint venture composed of 13 soft drink companies located in all parts of Minnesota. Its purpose is to redeem for money and recycle beverage related packaging. Soft drink companies in Minnesota forming the company include Pepsi-Cola bottling company of Thief River Falls and Coca-Cola bottling company of Crookston.

Bottlers were convinced something positive must be done to address Minnesota's solid waste and litter," stated association president Ralph Greig. "They strongly felt deposit elgislation on beverages was a very inefficient, expensive, discriminatory alternative which would provide minimal environmental benefit. They understood they would have to pay for an alternative of their own making, and they felt a private enterprise mechanism would have the greatest chance for success."

The basic plan is to initially open redemption centers which would redeem aluminum beverage cans, steel beverage cans, glass beverage containers, plastic beverage containers and newspapers. At a later time, other materials will be considered. MSD Recycle will operate the centers, and service other existing centers. The functions it can provide to existing centers are material market, transportation, equipment and business planning and public promotion.

It is recognized material volume is paramount to a continuing ability to ffer these functions, thus great care will be exercised in site selection. It is expected that at least six redemption centers will be open in the spring of 1980 in the Twin Cities, and that more will rapidly follow outside of the Twin Cities.

As a second step, MSD Recycle will be pursuing the voluntary separation of recyclables at the curbside in communities. It will use soft drink business advertising and promotion expertise, with the food retailing industry, to work with communities to gain profitable curbside participation levels. This area offers the potential of a ten per cent reduction in municipal residential solid waste presently landfilled.

Facts On Gout Heard On Toll Free Number

Most people think that gout is a disease other people get — especially those who live high — the Arthritis foundation has found. But the facts are, according to the foundation, that just about anybody can get it and that there is nothing funny about this acute form of arthritis. It is extremely painful, and can be crippling.

Fortunately, the Arthritis foundation reports, gout can be quickly and easily controlled with proper medication. The disease is usually caused by an excess accumulation of uric acid in the tissues. In an acute attack of gout, needle-like crystals of uric acid salt form in one or more joints, causing inflammation and severe pain. But today drugs are available that can solve the problem of gout.

During April the Arthritis foundation has a message on gout that may be heard by calling its toll-free number, 1-800-552-1278. Literature on gout and other arthritic diseases is available to callers free of charge.

In most Minnesota communities, the services of the Arthritis foundation are made possible by support of the United Fund.

By Donald R. Goodrich, D.D.S.

IF YOU CHIP A TOOTH

Billy was playing sandlot baseball. He was catcher - a brave one - without a mask. As fate would have it, the batter swung at a pitch and the backswing hit Billy in the mouth and chipped off two of this front teeth. This is a typical dental emergency which requires immediate dental care.

When injury exposes the tooth pulp, it can be serious since the potential for infection is high. The pulp is the innermost chamber of the tooth and contains nerves and blood vessels.

Temporary treatment of injured tooth pulp includes the use of a sedative dressing to cut down sensitivity in the area. If a pulpectomy (removal of the pulp material) is necessary, it will be followed by root-canal therapy, and the use of a crown or a cap if the tooth can be preserved.

Until you can get to a dentist following an injury, keep the mouth as clean as possible by rinsing it with a solution of salt water. If there are loose teeth, no food should be chewed until the teeth are stabilized in the jaw.

Diabetes Is Very Difficult For Juveniles

Coping with diabetes can be difficult for anyone, but it's especially hard if you're a child.

Diabetes is a serious chronic health problem, and according to a three-year-old University of Minnesota study, it afflicts roughly one out of every 530 school age children in the state.

Yet one of the biggest problems faced by these "juvenile onset" diabetics is their lack of visibility. Children with diabetes must learn to cope with a demanding program of daily treatment, and stay on it for the rest of their lives. But diabetes is relatively uncommon among children, and there may be no obvious symptoms if the disease is being successfully treated and controlled.

Health authorities statewide and nationwide have been focusing attention on the problems of diabetic children recently, in connection with the United Nations' international year of the child (IYC) observance.

Kind of diabetes that strikes children differs in a number of ways from the adult form of the disease, according to Dr. Richard Nelson, of the state health department's Services for Children with Handicaps program. "Mature onset" diabetes is more common but less severe than juvenile diabetes, he noted. While the adult diabetic's body may lose some of its ability to regulate the amount of sugar in the blood, it usually remains capable of producing at least some insulin on its own. Adult diabetics can often control their disease simply by reducing their need for insulin, through weight loss or a special diet. Fewer than half of all adult diabetics must take insulin.

For reasons which aren't fully understood, juvenile diabetics suddenly lose the ability to produce any insulin at all. Some 95 per cent of these children must have one or more injections of insulin every day. In addition, they must learn to control their need for insulin through diet, to make regular use of a urine test which tells if they're getting the right amount of sugar or insulin, and to avoid exercise if it might use up blood sugar which can't be immediately replaced. They must learn to carefully balance all of these factors if they are to keep their blood sugar at proper levels.

Although diabetic children can hardly avoid being aware of their condition, others may not even notice it. And they may be very much alone with their problem, since no more than one or two children in a typical school setting will have diabetes. Result can be a very special sense of isolation. Juvenile diabetic's family may also have special problems, since the transition from healthy child to diabetic is usually quite abrupt.

Dr. Nelson stressed, however, that much progress has been made in dealing with juvenile diabetes. Before insulin became available in 1920, most diabetic children died within two months of being diagnosed. Now, most survive the short term effects of the disease. They grow and develop normally, and enjoy "a generally brighter outlook," said Dr. Nelson.

These children now face a greater threat from the long term complications of diabetes, like vision problems or kidney disease, which result from damage to the smaller blood vessels. The longer a person has diabetes, the greater the risk of developing such complications, so diabetic children are especially vulnerable to these problems.

But, according to Dr. Nelson, research indicates that the more precisely diabetics can regulate their blood sugar levels, the less likely it is that they'll suffer complications. Work is now underway on an "artificial pancreas," which would continuously monitor blood sugar levels and automatically release insulin into the blood, as it was needed. Such a device would constantly "fine tune" blood sugar levels, mimicking the natural mechanisms of the body.

Juvenile diabetics also aren't as alone as they used to be, said Dr. Nelson. Organizations like the American Diabetes association now offer a variety of support services for diabetic children and their families, including education and recreation programs. As a result, this very difficult health problem is now much easier to deal with, he said.

Compromise To Neo-Prohibition Solution Given

by Jeanne Hanson
University News Service

"If you've got the time, we've got the beer," the TV ad croons. But next the news may carry the latest ghastly drunk driving accident: three teenagers killed.

Ever since people began drinking alcohol about 12,000 years ago, we've had problems handling it, said Jim Schaefer, head of the University of Minnesota's office of alcohol and other drug abuse programming.

Minnesota legislature is now considering a possible solution, called "neoprohibition" by some — raising the drinking age to 21. Schaefer has assembled information on the issue and suggests a compromise.

Alcohol consumption is increasing in Minnesota, partly due to increased consumption by young people, Schaefer said. When the drinking age was lowered to 18 in 1973, sales of strong beer boomed, growing from 20 gallons to 22.4 gallons per person in the first year alone. Consumption of all types of alcohol except 3.2 beer also increased, said Schaefer, who recently analyzed Minnesota department of revenue data. This spurt is in addition to the steady upward trend in drinking since Prohibition ended in the 1930s, he said.

These figures add up to more than numbers. There are more teenagers killed in drunk driving accidents, more 15 and 16-year-olds entering alcohol treatment programs and more kids under 10 experimenting with alcohol and other drugs. "We all want to send a message to stop these things," Schaefer said. "As a concerned parent, I'm as much of a 'neo-prohibitionist' as anyone," he said.

Just the financial effect of alcohol-related problems — a billion dollars a year in Minnesota alone — is enough to encourage neo-prohibition, Schaefer said.

But outlawing all alcohol for all teenagers would be futile, he said. "It won't perform the magic we want it to unless parents, school officials and law enforcement officials all take on the responsibility, which they are not now doing," he said.

And no state has ever succeeded in reducing alcohol consumption significantly, no matter what age restriction, sales tax, state monopoly, or dry law it has tried. Prohibition was the classic case of an unenforceable law, Schaefer said.

Forbidden fruit always looks more attractive, too, especially to adolescents. And less alcohol may mean more of other ways of coping, he said. As a safety valve to relieve pressures in a tense society, alcohol at least works better than violence, he said.

Most people use it responsibly and should not be punished for the abuse of a few, he said. In fact, one theory is that if more people are drinking responsibly, fewer others will develop alcohol problems. Along these lines, abuse prevention programs on most college campuses try to show people how to drink moderately. They have only been in existence for a few years and haven't really had a chance to show their potential yet, Schaefer said.

For all these reasons, Schaefer recommends a compromise: raising the drinking age to 21 for liquor, wine and strong beer and keeping it at 19 for 3.2 beer. There would have to be separate licenses and possibly separate rooms in bars, so it would be complicated and difficult to enforce, "but it would be worth a try," Schaefer said.

Mn/DOT Favors Milwaukee RR Reorganization

Minnesota department of transportation (Mn-DOT) supports the reorganization plan proposal by the bankrupt Milwaukee Road, according to Commissioner Richard P. Braun.

The plan offered by the Milwaukee Road's court-appointed bankruptcy trustee would provide continued uninterrupted service on rail lines considered critical for adequate shipment of farm commodities and coal in Minnesota, he said.

The plan, known as "Milwaukee II," would retain service on 739 miles of 1,234 miles of Milwaukee Road track within Minnesota. The plan is based on continued rehabilitation assistance, primarily on the Twin Cities to Austin to Jackson line.

Braun said Mn-DOT does not favor a plan submitted on behalf of the railroad's stockholders to liquidate the company's assets or plans proposed by a consortium of Milwaukee Road employees and shippers to create "New Milwaukee Lines." Neither of the proposals assures the needed, uninterrupted rail service.

If approved by the ICC and the bankruptcy court, Milwaukee Road would be permitted to abandon 495 miles of trackage in Minnesota, but would continue to operate those lines designated as critical by Mn-DOT.

The lines are the Twin Cities to Ortonville (158 miles) and on to Miles City, Mont., St. Paul to Minneapolis (11 miles), Twin Cities to LaCrescent (127 miles), and Twin Cities to Austin to Jackson (206 miles).

The Twin Cities-Ortonville-Miles City line allows for shipment of coal to power plants generating electricity for western Minnesota and gives Minnesota shippers access to the West Coast and Dakota shippers access to the Twin Cities and Duluth.

Minnesota, North and South Dakota spent $2.3 million in 1979 to partially rehabilitate this line in order to ensure continued operation.

The St. Paul to Minneapolis line ensures single-carrier service between Chicago and Miles City.

The lines from the Twin Cities to La Crescent and to Austin and Jackson are essential to agriculture in southern Minnesota.

The La Crescent line provides much of southern Minnesota with direct access to the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico via the ports of Red Wing and Winona and access to Chicago and the Eastern markets.

Commenting on the Twin Cities to Austin to Jackson line, Braun said, "With the increasing number of rail abandonments in this part of the state this line becomes a major grain outlet since eight other rail lines which abut or adjoin the Milwaukee Road trackage have been abandoned or are proposed for abandonment. During the last two years, another 30 lines also have been abandoned or have been proposed for abandonment in southern Minnesota."

Rehabilitation is already in progress on this line from Alden to Winnebago. "so far," he said, "the improvements have made it possible to ship more than 15 million bushels of corn and large amounts of coal, fertilizer, lumber, canned goods and other products. The Milwaukee Road has already repaid shippers more than $150,000 for its part of the rehabilitation program."

State funds for improving this line come from the Minnesota rail service improvement program, created to encourage rehabilitation of economically viable but deteriorating rail lines by upgrading service to rail users. The voluntary program consists of a three-party contract with the rail users, the railroad company and the state.

Southern Minn. Farmers Spend $244,763 Each

Farmer-members of the Southwestern Minnesota Farm management association spent an average of $244,763 each in their communities during 1979, according to association records analyzed by University of Minnesota farm management specialists.

Delane Welsch, the extension economist who prepared the association annual report, adds that the spending figure was an increase of 21 per cent ($42,000) over 1978.

Farmers with membership in the Southeastern Minnesota farm management association spent $169,598 on the average. This was a 13 per cent ($20,000) increase over the year before.

Data from 179 southwestern association farms showed that an average of about $67,250 was spent on the farming inputs of fertilizer, chemicals, seed, feed, repair and fuel. Another $24,700 was used to purchase machinery and equipment. More than $64,250 was paid to other farmers for livestock and custom work, while members spent about $2,200 for support of local government through property taxes.

In the southeastern association, the average farmer-member spent approximately $55,000 on the farming inputs and $23,000 on machinery. Other farmers were paid about $13,700, and support of local government cost about $2,700. These averages are based on records from 83 farms.

In the southwestern association on an operator's share basis, return to operator and family labor, management, and equity capital (net worth) declined by 54 per cent, from $62,473 in 1978 to $28,746 in 1979. Among the reasons for the decline were increased costs, lower returns from beef cattle and hogs due to lower prices, and lower returns from corn and soybeans due to hail damage. Returns to dairy cows were up, but there were only 24 dairy farms among the 179 southwestern members.

In the southeastern association, on an operator's share basis, return to operator and family labor, management, and equity capital (net worth) declined by 37 per cent, from $55,428 in 1978 to $35,061 in 1979. Although returns from dairy cattle were up, only 38 dairy farms remain among the 83 southeastern records summarized. Dairy gains were more than offset by decreased earnings from hogs and soybeans and increased costs.

Grant Awarded For Study Of Steelmaking

Governor Al Quie, commissioner and state cochairman of the Upper Great Lakes regional commission (UGLRC), has announced a $94,000 technical assistance grant to the mineral resources research center, University of Minnesota, to study the feasibility of direct reduction of iron ore and steelmaking in the Upper Great Lakes region.

The grant is part of a $104,000 project. Other funding will provide $10,000 from the mineral resources research center. The project presented by Minnesota will be funded in conjunction with Wisconsin and Michigan.

The two main natural resources required for steelmaking, iron ore and coal, are now being exported from the region. This study will examine the resources available, transportation, socioeconomic factors, technological and environmental aspects of establishing new industries to increase the added value of the iron resources exported from the region.

"If world iron ore and steel markets continue to threaten Upper Great Lakes iron ore production it may be necessary to aggressively explore local processing to enable the industry to continue operating at current levels," Governor Quie said. "If overseas pressures are not excessive, the development of local industry for direct reduction and-or steelmaking could add significant growth and breadth to the local iron ore based economy. Establishment of several ministeel mills of 200,000 to 400,000 tons per year would provide many job opportunities, increased income and state taxes which are an important part of the goals of the UGLRC."

The meeting was held in Washington, D.C., and was attended by Governor Quie, Wisconsin Governor Lee Sherman Dreyfus, Michigan Governor William Milliken and President Carter's federal cochairman, William R. Bechtel.

UGLRC is a local-state-federal partnership for the economic development of 119 counties in northern Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan. The commission works aggressively toward the goals of increasing incomes of the region's citizens, diversifying the region's economic base, encouraging the sound use of the region's natural resources and improving the quality of life for the region's citizens.

The commission works toward these goals through its technical assistance grant program which funds feasibility studies and demonstration projects of regional impact, and its supplemental grant program which helps meet local matching share requirements for public works projects.

UGLRC has helped facilitate multi-state planning and development and has coordinated local, state, federal and private investments.

Lichens Can Gauge Pollution Problem

by Mark E. Canney
'U' M News Service

Anyone who has hiked through the north woods of Minnesota or driven along the shores of Lake Superior has seen lichens spattered on rocks and trees like splashes of green, yellow and orange paint. Some types — "old man's beard" is one — hang from trees like a miniature version of Spanish moss.

Found primarily in the upper third of the state, lichens are usually thought of as food for deer, caribou, snails and slugs. Birds sometimes use them as material for their nests. A researcher at the University of Minnesota has been studying the plants for quite a different purpose.

Clifford Wetmore, botany professor at the university, has traveled thousands of miles in the state collecting and cataloging the plants. Besides their usefulness as food and lodging for animals, lichens are natural monitors of air pollution.

"Lichens act as a first alert for declining air quality," Wetmore said.

Certain types of lichens will die out in an area that is exposed to even low concentrations of such air pollutants as sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides, Wetmore said. Acid rain may also affect the plant.

Lichens are actually two different organisms — algae and fungi — living together in a single structure. The algae and fungi depend on one another for life, and it is this symbiotic relationship that makes lichens good pollution monitors, Wetmore said.

"Any change in air conditions will upset the delicate balance of the partners and result in the death of the organism," he said.

When Wetmore returns to an area he has already studied and finds that some of the lichens are gone, sophisticated pollution monitors such as gas analyzers can be brought in for further testing.

But lichens act as more than a first alert, Wetmore said. They can also provide a graduated view of pollution problems. Some types of lichens are more sensitive to air pollution than others, and if several kinds are found in one area, their relative survival rates illustrate the severity of the pollution.

Since lichens are sensitive only to pollution sources that are airborne, they can be used to determine the sources of other forms of pollution, as Wetmore saw recently near Babbitt.

"The vascular plants near an operating iron mine in the Babbitt area were showing signs of damage," he said. "But because the lichens were lush, we ruled out air pollution and found the source of the problem to be ground pollution."

The key to Wetmore's work is to establish baselines; he must learn the makeup of the lichen population in times of little or no air pollution before he can make judgments about subsequent pollution problems.

At the turn of the century, pioneer lichenologist Bruce Fink did extensive surveys of Minnesota lichen populations, and Wetmore relies on much of this work for his studies. But as logging and other forms of "progress" alter the lichen population, Wetmore must continually monitor the changes in lichen growth in the state.

Recently he did extensive collecting and classifying of the lichens in the Voyageurs National park. "If there is to be copper-nickel mining nearby, the lichen population will monitor its effect on the air quality," he said.

Wetmore is also concerned about the effect of acid rain in northern Minnesota.

"The organism goes into a dormant state in times of little rainfall," he said. "When it does rain, the plant begins photosynthesis and other metabolic processes, making it more vulnerable to pollution."

Wetmore thinks an acidic rain could affect the lichen at this most vulnerable time. To verify his theory, he plans to survey Isle Royale in Lake Superior next summer. He did population studies of lichens on the island in 1957, which will give him a good baseline study from which to work.

"Isle Royale gets very little air pollution but is known to receive large amounts of acid rain," he said. "If there is any change in the lichen population since I last studied the area, it could be the result of the acid rain."

Wetmore's findings could be of special significance when the Atikokan power plant now under construction in Ontario is completed. The plant has come under fire from environmentalists who believe it will drastically increase the amount of acid rain in the Boundary Waters Canoe area and Voyageurs National park.

LARGE PINK BOW became a special Easter bonnet for Alex Kosanda, 84, a resident of Valley Home in Thief River Falls since January of 1979. Valley Home residents searched for the most unusual or colorful ornaments Tuesday afternoon for display on their hats for the annual Easter hat parade conducted at the home.

CERTAINLY ONE OF the most flowery hats displayed at Valley Home Tuesday afternoon was this hat constructed by Pauline Culver, a resident of the home for the past year. All residents participating in the event were to design their own hats for modeling in the Easter hat parade, with prizes awarded to those with the most unusual, colorful, large, small, or creative hats.

Civil Liberties In Wartime Deferred

by William Hoffman
'U' M News Service

Parade made its way along Nicollet avenue to the beating of drums and the blare of bugles and the wild enthusiasm of people who lined the street on that August day in 1917.

The parade arrived at a speakers platform. Fred B. Snyder, chairman of the University of Minnesota board of regents and head of the Stars and Stripes league, mounted the platform, surveyed the crowd, and let loose the first salvo.

It was aimed southwest — at New Ulm, a city of rich German heritage. New Ulm was being run by a band of armed traitors, Snyder said. Some New Ulm officials had attended an anti-draft meeting "where thought and speech lent aid and comfort to our enemy, the imperial government of Germany," he said.

"What are we going to do with these copperheads?" Snyder thundered. ('Copperhead' was the term used to describe a northerner who sympathized with the South during the Civil War.) "Shoot 'em, hang 'em," roared the crowd. "Down with traitors!"

Five days later three New Ulm officials — the mayor, the city attorney, and the county auditor — were cashiered from office by the Minnesota commission of public safety, a wartime agency formed by the state legislature and headed by Gov. J. A. A. Burnquist.

The charge against the officials was malfeasance, and the action was taken, Burnquist said, so that liberty, equality, and humanity might endure. If the New Ulm Three had sought justice in court, it is unlikely they could have found a judge and jury not inflamed with patriotic fervor. Even if they had it is unlikely that their rights of free speech and assembly would have been upheld, for this was a state, not a federal, matter.

The Bill of Rights was adjourned during the war, University of Minnesota professor Paul Murphy argues in his new book, World War I and the Origin of Civil Liberties in the United States. But even before the war and throughout the 19th century civil liberties were largely the preserve of people who owned property — those people ordinarily least in need of them.

Only after the wartime experience at home — government and vigilante suppression of dissent and disloyalty — and the contrived "Red Scare" following the war, did civil liberties win a public constituency, according to Murphy, a history professor on the Twin Cities campus.

And only after Supreme Court decisions stemming from prosecutions under the Espionage and Sedition acts, passed by Congress during the war, did a body of case law on civil liberties begin to emerge. Judicial standards established by those decisions clarified basic rights, Murphy said.

"In the war 'to make the world safe for democracy,' (President Woodrow) Wilson thought that a temporary sacrifice of civil liberties at home was hardly too much to ask," Murphy explained.

People who protested the war were seen as radicals, traitors, misfits, aliens, and "slackers." If Socialists, Wobblies (International Workers of the World), Non-Partisan Leaguers, and the pacifists didn't share Wilson's vision of a progressive liberal democracy, then they should have at least kept their mouths shut.

Soon after America's entry into the war, the government launched "a deliberate planned program of federal suppression," Murphy said. "This was unique in the American experience."

Wilson felt that a major advertising campaign was needed to "sell the war" to the American people. By an emergency decree he established the Committee on Public Information and chose George Creel, a former newspaperman to lead it. It was an exercise in mind control, Murphy said.

Among other things, Creel worked with various censorship agencies and with Postmaster General Albert Burleson to control the publication and spread of material deemed counterproductive to the war effort.

Murphy provides a list of some of the abusive activities of government and vigilante groups. For example, a small-town Minnesota newspaper editor was beaten and his presses wrecked for refusing to publish editorials critical of the Non-Partisan League, a radical agrarian group.

A South Dakota senator's law offices were splashed with yellow paint because he opposed America's entry into the war. And there was New Ulm.

Incidents like these disturbed some Americans who worried that government and local repression might continue after the war, according to Murphy.

Americans began "to explore the idea that the protection of civil liberties was a serious public responsibility in a democracy," he said.

Mobile Home Fire Safety Is Stressed

Tightening conventional home mortgage market combined with higher home costs, is forcing more people to think about mobile homes — and the ones who have already made the switch need an education in fire safety, said John P. Sopsic, commissioner of the Minnesota department of public safety.

In one of the recent mobile home deaths in Minnesota, the cause was reportedly a space heater.

State fire marshal Wes Werner urges mobile home owners to be sure of proper installation of heating units. Wood burning and other stoves in homes are often a hazard because the owner attempts a "do-it-yourself" approach.

Other problems are servicing (too infrequently or not at all), burning "green" wood which is often damp and builds up creosote in chimneys, a major cause of fires.

Werner also advised those who have purchased homes from others to check the furnaces and stoves.

They would be well advised to check mobile home building code regulations too.

Richard Hauck, section chief of manufactured structures at the State of Minnesota building code division, said the state adopted mobile home regulations for the first time in 1972. The legislature updated them in 1974.

In 1976, Hauck noted, federal mobile home safety standards took effect.

Failure to install heating devices properly and poor maintenance of units are major problems, Hauck said. Studies show, he added that fires caused by wood burning appliances are responsible for 87 per cent of the total of conventional and mobile homes.

People trying to cut down on fuel bills cannot be blamed for trying to do different things but they ought to get advice on heating units and service wehen necessary, Hauck said.

Other building-code related problems that apply to all homes but are specifically critical in mobile homes are: storage of combustible material near furnaces; failure to have separate air chambers for combustible air; purchasing cheap units without checking their reliability. "Any appliance should have Underwriter Label seal of approval," Hauck said. This includes fireplaces, wood stoves, furnaces and hot water heaters.

The most recent federal standards require that water heater and furnace compartments be lined with non-combustible material and protection with similar materials in the kitchen area.

Ron Fagerstrom, fire chief of Blaine, Spring Lake Park and Mounds View, said convincing the public of home fire dangers is a major challenge. Fagerstrom whose area has 11 mobile home parks with 3,000 homes, said in 1979 there were 102 building fire losses in Blaine, of which 28 were in mobile homes. Mounds View had four mobile home blazes out of 35 homes first and in Spring Lake Park there were none out of 11 reported. The 1978 overall total for three communities was 27 mobile losses out of 113 home fires. A comparable comparison for 1979 is 32 out of 118.

Fagerstrom has made special effort to alert mobile home owners of fire rules and potential problems. "Fire Escape from Mobile Homes" an information sheet was distributed in the area. It is similar to one put together by the St. Cloud fire department on mobile home safety.

Salient points are: Where fires start (living room 27 per cent; kitchen, 22 per cent; basement, 14 per cent; bedrooms, 13 per cent; all others, 14 per cent); and the fact that most fatalities occur between 12 midnight and 6 a.m. and a family instruction checklist for early escape.

Emergency Loan Fund Boosted By $2 Million

Minnesota farmers will be eligible for up to $40 million in emergency loans in 1980 through legislation approved recently by the Senate.

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz said the economic emergency loan program passed the Senate on a voice vote and is now on its way to the President for signing.

The measure, which will be administered by the Farmers Home administration, increased the authorization under the program from $4 billion to $6 billion. Of the additional funds, $1 billion will be spent in 1980 and another $1 billion in 1981, according to Boschwitz.

Boschwitz said funds under the program will be available for operating loans to be repaid over a seven year period and for farm land loans to be repaid over a period of 40 years. The farm land loans are designated for helping farmers meet payments on land already purchased. To be eligible for the emergency loans, a farmer must have been turned down by at least one commercial lender.

"Although this is not the total answer to the credit crunch facing our farmers in Minnesota," Boschwitz said, "it is a step in the right direction and I urge the President to sign the measure. It will at least make some funds available so that farmers can get the cash they need to put in the 1980 crop."

Boschwitz said farmers interested in applying for loans should contact their local FmHA office for an application. For further information farmers may contact Boschwitz' St. Paul office by calling toll free 1-800-652-9771.

cancer answers

"Cancer Answers" is a weekly column sponsored by the Red River Valley Medical society, the Red River Valley unit of the American Cancer society and the Thief River Falls Times. Questions may be mailed to the editor, Thief River Falls Times. All questions will be answered, and those of a general interest will be published in "Cancer Answers."

Dear Cancer Answers:

I drink a lot of diet pop and am wondering if any evidence of cancer has been found in saccharin users? Although I don't put much stock in animal studies predicting cancer causing substances in humans, I might take any known human cancer risk more seriously

— Lyle

Dear Lyle:

Depending upon how much diet pop you drink, you may be at somewhat higher risk of bladder cancer than the average person who does not use artificial sweeteners, according to the preliminary findings of a study conducted by the National Cancer Institute and the FDA.

The study involved interviews from March 1978, to June 1979, with more than 3,000 bladder cancer patients and almost 6,000 people from the general population who did not have cancer, but were similar in age and sex. Three of every four persons in the study were men. (Bladder cancer is three times more common in men than in women and is more common among cigarette smokers and among workers exposed to certain chemicals on the job).

The authors of the study concluded that while saccharin and cyclamate are not strong carcinogens, they should be regarded as potential risk factors for human bladder cancer, based on the results of this study plus previous experiments in laboratory animals.

The authors also said that saccharin and cyclamate may enhance the cancer-causing effects of heavy cigarette smoking.

One purpose of the NCI study was to examine conclusions of previous, smaller studies that found a 60 per cent increased risk of bladder cancer among men who consume sugar substitutes. The NCI study said the increased risk would not exceed 18 per cent among average male users of sugar substitutes.

Bladder cancer, diagnosed in 15 out of every 100,000 persons, is the sixth most common form of cancer in the United States. The disease usually occurs in older age groups, and more often in white than in blacks, Orientals, or American Indians.

By the way, of the approximately 30 agents known to cause cancer in humans, almost all cause cancer in laboratory animals. This and the fact that we cannot afford to wait for absolute proof of carcinogenicity in humans are strong factors in our need to heed warnings based on animal research and reduce or eliminate human exposure to probably cancer-causing agents.

Dear Cancer Answers:

I'm an elementary school teacher. One of the children in my class has leukemia and has missed two months of school. He now has completed his treatment and is well enough to come back to school. I'm anxious about having him in class again. Will he need any special care? Are there any problems I should anticipate?

Mrs. J.

Dear Mrs. J.:

Students with chronic health problems are always a special concern for teachers. Your anxiety about the special needs of this child is understandable.

The best source of information on your student's specific needs is his parents. If you have not done so already, talk to the parents. The more you know about their child's condition, the better equipped you'll be to meet his needs. Ask the parents about any medications he may be taking and whether they cause any side-effects that may interfere with his normal routine. Find out how much the child knows and understands about his illness and respect any guidelines his parents may have established for discussing or referring to his condition. Be sure you are aware of and understand any physical limitations the child's disease may have caused. Ask for the name and telephone number of the doctor or clinic responsible for the child's treatment in case of emergency.

In general you should try to make the student's re-entry into the class as normal as possible. Children with serious medical conditions or chronic diseases are usually happier if the illness does not set them apart from others.

Show this child the same care, support, and understanding you offer all of your students and enforce the same limits on behavior. Continue to challenge him academically. Pride in their school work and accomplishments is especially important to children who have been robbed by illness of a sense of control over their lives.

Dear Cancer Answers:

Is vitamin C helpful in the treatment of cancer? I heard that it was but never knew of anyone who was receiving vitamin C as a part of their therapy. Also, can vitamin C help prevent cancer?

Curious

Dear Curious:

Cancer therapy consisting of as much as ten grams of vitamin C per day has been widely publicized. Among the claimed benefits are relief of pain, tumor regression, and prolonged life expectancy. These claims, based mainly on the research conducted by Dr. Linus Pauling and his associates in Scotland, have not held up in carefully structured research trials in this country.

SMILING BENEATH HIS Easter bonnet, is Charlie Bowman, a resident of Valley Home in Thief River Falls for the past two years. Bowman, 89, was one of several who modeled his homemade Easter hat during the Easter hat parade at the home Tuesday afternoon.

Vitamin C experiments with laboratory animals, selected for their similarity to humans in developing cancer, have shown apparently conflicting results. On the one hand, vitamin C did seem to protect lung cells against malignant changes caused by tobacco smoke. However, the cancerous tumors produced in these laboratory animals actually seemed to need vitamin C to grow. The tumors appeared to grow less rapidly when the animals received no vitamin C.

The results of a carefully controlled Mayo clinic study of 150 advanced cancer patients, half of whom were given vitamin C and half of whom got placebos (sugar pills), were reported in the New England Journal of Medicine last fall. The study showed no significant differences in the survival, relief of pain or other symptoms between these two groups of patients.

Some scientific studies have suggested that vitamin C can help boost the human body's natural immune system. Some people, therefore, might be tempted to take large doses of vitamin C on the theory that it "can't hurt and might help." But there are risks involved in taking too much vitamin C. It can, for example, lower the level of vitamin B12 in the blood which can, in turn, cause potentially serious changes in the bone marrow.

Dear Cancer Answers:

What's new with the hair dye issue these days? Have the products with hazardous chemicals been taken off the market? Or have they just been replaced by similar potentially cancer causing dyes? Is there any type of hair coloring that is safe?

G.P.

Dear G.P.:

Most major cosmetics manufacturers have removed the ingredient 4-MMPD, the worst offender among the "permanent" coal-tar hair dyes which were found to cause cancer in laboratory test animals several years ago. The products most likely still to contain high levels of 4-MMPD (also known as 2, 4 DAA) are "permanent" hair dyes in shades of black and brown. The vivid warm shades, such as reddish or golden blond, contain lower concentrations of the chemical.

Starting in mid-April, the FDA will require the following label on those few products which still contain this coal-tar dye:

"Warning — contains an ingredient that can penetrate your skin and has been determined to cause cancer in laboratory animals."

Unfortunately, this information becomes complicated because some cosmetic companies as yet have made only minor changes in their chemical formulas. They are taking advantage of the long period of grace that the FDA allows before enforcing a ban on potentially dangerous substances.

Another complication arises from the fact that the FDA cannot ban all coal-tar derivatives at once — each compound must be tested and judged separately. Thus, hair dye manufacturers may be producing new compounds that don't require a warning label even though the new product isn't any safer than the old one. This means that at some later date there may be another announcement of a potentially dangerous chemical in "permanent" coal-tar dyes.

This does not mean that people have to give up coloring their hair for fear of cancer. Dangerous chemicals are less likely to be included in temporary tints, rinses or semi-permanent hair dyes.

Whatever brand is used, you should limit the frequency of hair coloring, minimize the contact between the chemical and the scalp and rinse liberally with water as soon as the proper time period has elapsed.

The FDA urges that customers who have their hair dyed professionally ask their hair-dressers to show them the labels of dye products used. If any labels include the warning cited above, customers may wish to discuss alternative products with their hair-dressers.

Dear Cancer Answers:

Three of my friends and my sister have cancer, and they all have questions about it. Are there any reliable books on cancer written for non-medical people?

W.R.

Dear W.R.:

There are numerous books on cancer that might be helpful. The following list contains just a few which you should be able to find at most libraries or book stores: (General Information) "The Cancer Reference Book", by Paul Levitt and Elissa Buralnick; "You Can Fight Cancer and Win", by Jane Brody; "Living with Cancer", by Ernest H. Rosenbaum, M.D.; (Personal— Experiences) "A Stay of Execution", by Stewart Alsop; "Make Today Count", by Orville Kelly; (Breast Cancer) "Three Weeks in Spring", by Joan Parker; "Post-Mastectomy: A Personal Experience," by W. A. Winkler; (Nutrition during Cancer Therapy) "Health Through Nutrition", Ernest H. Rosenbaum, M.D., et al.

If you would like a more complete list of books about cancer, call the Cancer Information Service. In Minnesota, the toll-free number is 1-800-582-5262, and in North Dakota it's 1-800-328-5188. Or you can write to the CIS, 2750 Park Avenue, Minneapolis, Minnesota 55407.

Funds Added To Endangered Species Plan

Over $2 million in additional federal funds for endangered species programs in 35 states has been allocated by the Interior Department's U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, bringing to $5 million the total amount provided to the states for this purpose in fiscal year 1980.

This latest series of grants to states with cooperative endangered species agreements with the service will boost their survey, research, and law enforcement efforts in behalf of their rarest animal and plant species.

More than $18 million has been apportioned to the growing number of eligible states since the grant program began in 1976.

Last November, Congress appropriated an additional $2 million for the grant-in-aid program, supplementing the $3 million that had already been allotted. Earlier, the eligibility requirements were liberalized, permitting 13 new states to participate this year. Provisions for co-operative agreements to protect plants have broadened the program so that now endangered plants as well as animals may benefit from federally funded state efforts.

Semi-annual allocations are based on state requests for support of specific endangered species projects, with the federal government picking up 67 per cent of the costs and the states paying 33 per cent. The federal share is increased to 75 per cent when two or more states cooperate in work on a single species.

Since the program began, federal funds have led to major conservation efforts in behalf of more than 200 imperiled species, ranging from the peregrine falcon, American bald eagle, and Indiana bat to the greenback cutthroat trout and Atlantic loggerhead sea turtle.

Among the most significant accomplishments under the grant program has been the protection of vital habitats for endangered and threatened species through state land acquisition or other forms of conservation. Seventeen significant areas in five states either have been or are planned for acquisition to protect 11 different endangered species, ranging from the 480-acre Alkali Sink ecological reserve for the San Joaquin kit fox and blunt-nosed leopard lizard in California to the 416-acre Higbee Beach reserve at Cape May, New Jersey for the peregrine falcon and bald eagle.

In fashioning the endangered species act, Congress incorporated provisions for cooperative agreements between the federal and state governments, recognizing the states' traditional wildlife management roles and their expertise in efforts to restore endangered wildlife and plants on a local level.

To qualify for grants under Section 6 of the endangered species act, states must enter into a formal cooperative agreement with the Interior Department, demonstrating that they have the legal authority to conserve and protect endangered species; have established acceptable programs; are authorized to conduct investigations and establish recovery plans; and have provided for public participation in the designation of species as endangered or threatened.

The 12 states and one territory entering the grant-in-aid program this fiscal year are Alaska, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Minnesota; Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, Ohio, Utah, and the Virgin Islands. As many as 46 states may be eligible for federal grants by 1981.

The attached table shows both allocations in the 1980 fiscal year for the 35 States currently participating in the program.

'U'M To Press For Separate HHH Building

The University of Minnesota will continue to press for an $11 million building for the Hubert H. Humphrey institute of public affairs to be located near Memorial stadium.

University testimony before the Senate Finance committee Wednesday — which featured Muriel Humphrey and the new institute director Harlan Cleveland — made no acknowledgment that just a few hours earlier a House committee had voted to combine the Humphrey Institute with a proposed business administration building addition in a $13.2 million building on the west bank campus.

"Our position is $11 million for the Humphrey Institute and $3.8 million for the college of business administration," Stanley Kegler, University vice president, said in an interview after the Senate meeting.

Roger Moe, DFL-Ada, chairman of the Senate finance committee, told reporters that he supports separate buildings for business administration and public affairs. He said his committee will make a recommendation on the Humphrey institute building.

The education division of the House Appropriations committee will finish its building bill early next week — including its recommendation for the combination building. Differences between House and Senate building bills are resolved in a conference committee.

The combination Humphrey Institute-business administration building was the idea of Mike Sieben, DFL-Newport, chairman of the education division, whose proposal passed by a vote of seven to six. Sieben said his plan to combine the two building requests was "severely criticized" by some legislators in both parties. "Maybe that's the mark of a good compromise," he said.

The Senate testimony of Muriel Humphrey and Harlan Cleveland concentrated on the educational goals of the new public affairs program, but made it clear that a special building was needed to meet those goals.

"Hubert wanted the institute to be the best of its kind in the world, to put the Kennedy school and the LBJ school in second place," Muriel Humphrey said. "I see Minnesota becoming the most visible school of public affairs in the nation."

Cleveland emphasized the need to train leaders in all the professions. People who rise to the top of their specialized professions aren't necessarily prepared to assume leadership roles, he said. "The institute needs to work across the university with every discipline and profession and outside the university with diverse local, national and international communities," Cleveland said.

Lack of a building limits this program, Cleveland said. "You and we will have to design and build a new one to do it all and do it right."

Minnesota Is Improving Its Bicycle Safety

Minnesota has been improving its bike safety record the past several years, according to Commissioner John P. Sopaic of the Department of Public Safety.

In 1979 there were 14 bike fatalities compared to 23 in 1978.

Public Safety approved federal highway safety bike projects in 24 Minnesota cities this year. According to Tom Boerner, director of the office of traffic safety, a number of communities showed a favorable accident-fatality ratio the past year. Grants are designed for enforcement, education, adjudication and public information. The 24 grants are for more than $100,000.

Getting the grants are Annandale, St. Anthony, Anoka, Breckenridge, Brooklyn Park, Cloquet, Columbia Heights, Cottage Grove, Dayton, Deer River, Duluth, Edina, Halsted, Hutchinson, Marshall, Montevideo, Mound, New Hope, Richfield, St. Cloud, St. Paul, Waseca, Willmar and Woodbury.

In St. Cloud last year there were 22 bike-related accidents and no deaths. The year before there were 28 accidents and one fatality. Just one of the cities listed, Duluth, had a bicycle fatality in 1979. In 1978 Cloquet, Duluth and St. Cloud had bike deaths.

One problem with the mild winter is the increase in bicycling as it relates to vehicular traffic. Through mid-March, however, there have been no reported bike fatalities in the state.

With the energy crunch being what it is and no sign of any letup, added numbers of people will be bicycling in future months. That could increase the accident risks.

Nationally, the record shows that more than 1,000 people are being killed annually and thousands more injured in traffic crashes involving the driver of an automobile (whose vehicle weighs about a ton and a half) and bicyclists (who combined with their vehicle weight in at about 200 pounds). The unprotected cyclist is going to be the loser, regardless of fault, in those accidents.

In many cases, bad habits of the bicyclist eventually lead to the accident. Among the bad habits are failure to stop for stop signs, failure to signal turns, traveling on the wrong side of the street, riding at night without lights and failure to observe pedestrian rights.

Motorists are guilty of neglecting biker interests. Often motorists will turn in front of cyclists who are riding on the right side of the road. Motorists often ignore bikers' signals and too frequently do not grant bicyclists equal rights at intersections.

Boerner said traditionally there are more than 1,200 bike accidents in the state each year.

To accentuate the bike safety program, the state had its first bicycle safety conference in February at the Radisson Arrowwood resort, near Alexandria. It was conducted by the Agricultural Extension service of the University of Minnesota under a grant made available through the Department of Public Safety. Registered were 100 people from 45 cities and villages.

Psychologists Say Daydreaming Is OK

by Jeanne Hanson
'U' News Service

We all do it. We do it to entertain ourselves, to work on our worries, to feel sexually aroused, to cheer ourselves on, and to fill a spare minute or two while we're waiting at a stoplight.

In fact, we spend 30 to 40 per cent of our waking hours daydreaming, according to Eric Klinger, psychologist at the University of Minnesota's Twin Cities and Morris campuses. Klinger has studied daydreams extensively, mostly by "thought sampling": those whose thoughts are being "sampled" carry bleepers and write down what they're thinking when the bleeper bleeps.

"We used to be told that daydreaming was neurotic," Klinger said. "That view was damaging, and made people anxious about their fantasies. Actually, it would be abnormal and unhealthy not to daydream."

About a fifth of a normal person's daydreams are somewhat weird anyway, especially those that contain dreamlike imagery, Klinger and other researchers have found in their studies.

Daydreams can be important tools for solving problems, Klinger said. In a daydream, problems can be mulled over and possible solutions can be rehearsed. Likewise, problems from the past can be rehashed and possibly better solutions tried out.

Since daydreaming can lead to creative insights while preventing boredom at the same time, Klinger thinks daydreaming may even be a productive tool to use on the job.

Daydreaming may also be good for the brain physiologically, although evidence is not yet clear, Klinger said. As we periodically switch away from directed thinking, daydreams both relax and stimulate the brain. They are associated with alpha brain waves, a lower heart rate, and little eye movement.

"There's some evidence that daydreaming peaks in 100-minute cycles, the way nighttime dreams do," Klinger said. Rapid eye movement (REM) periods at night last only a few minutes at first, but the longer you sleep, the longer and more vivid they become. Daydreaming may or may not be like REM sleep in this respect, he said.

Of course not all daydreams are like dreams or are full-blown fantasies, Klinger said. Often the mind is just wandering. According to his studies, the average length for a daydream is five to 14 seconds, with many shorter scraps of thought and some longer "stories" lasting about a minute and a half sprinkled throughout.

Shorter ones are fleeting thoughts that typically range from "I've got to do my laundry" to "I should get closer to God." Longer ones can be realistic or quite fantastic, with the daydreamer usually the "star." About two thirds of our daydreams have something to do with the immediate environment, Klinger said.

Visual and auditory elements in daydreams vary from person to person, he said. Most daydreams are predominantly visual. Some people daydream without imagined sound, and others imagine the "characters" talking, with or without a "narrator." Daydreams with smells and tastes are less common, he said.

There are surprisingly few differences in daydreams of people of different ages and sexes, though, he said. Klinger's studies with college students and other researchers' studies with adults up to age 90 show amazingly similar results. The older people daydreamed only slightly more about the past, and less about sex and heroic exploits. Men's and women's daydreams were quite similar except for certain obvious differences — which sex was the subject of sexual fantasies, for example. Samples were small, though, and content was not specifically studied this way, Klinger said.

Studies of daydreams people had while taking exams showed that test-taking anxiety seems to be the result, not the cause, of poor performance, Klinger said. Anxious daydreams of poorly prepared students kept returning to their lack of preparation and its effects. "So maybe just allaying test anxiety isn't enough," he said.

Distracted basketball players had similar problems. When the team was in trouble, players tended to reflect on how well they were or weren't doing or to exhort themselves to do better. If they were trained to avoid these distractions, slumps might be shorter, Klinger said. Evidence from other studies indicates that mental practicing of physical skills improves free-throw performance. Rehearsing social skills mentally can also make people less shy, Klinger said.

Daydreaming actually has very few pitfalls, he said, but among them is that rehearsing catastrophes can strengthen fear. Daydreamers might practice changing the ending of daydreams about difficult situations, he said.

Rehearsing impossible happy endings can sometimes be discouraging, too, he said, though this is rare. Magical imaginary solutions can prevent practical ones. And daydreams about personal problems solved by transformations of other people can have the same effect.

But most daydreams are good for you, Klinger said. The idle mind is not necessarily the devil's playground.

New Sunflower Facility Built At Moorhead

Construction of a new multi-million dollar sunflower seed production facility was recently begun by Northrup King Co. at a location near Moorhead, Minnesota.

Doug Lohmar, president of the Minneapolis-based firm, announced that the modern facility will condition oil-type hybrid sunflower seed for planting and hull confectionary sunflower seed.

The facility is scheduled for completion in August, in time to handle the 1980 sunflower seed crop. It will include a 65,000 square foot warehouse, a 2,000 square foot office complex and a three-story, 5,000 square foot sunflower mill.

When completed the warehouse facility will have the capacity to store over six million pounds of sunflower seed. The mill will consist of a facility for hybrid seed conditioning and will be able to condition about six million pounds of sized, bagged seed per year.

The confectionary hulling facility will have the capacity to produce up to 4 million pounds of sunflower meats and 10 million pounds of seed used for roasters and birdfood.

Officials of the company said the new two and a half million dollar facility will help make seed distribution more timely and the transportation of seed more efficient.

"The Fargo-Moorhead area was selected as the location of the new plant because it's the center of the nation's most important sunflower growing region," Lohmar said.

"As the European sunflower oil market soars and U.S. consumers use more sunflower oil, sunflower production is going to expand and become increasingly more important. The new sunflower facility is one of the ways Northrup King plans to be prepared to meet the needs of sunflower growers in the future," Lohmar added.

Coccidiosis Is Major Parasite Among Pets

by Robert L. Stear, DVM

Each year dog and cat owners purchase large quantities of worming compounds to control intestitinal parasites in their pets. Often pet owners decide worms are present by observing their pets eating grass, rubbing their hindquarters along the ground, or suffering from diarrhea. However, these symptoms can be characteristic of all sorts of diseases, including indigestion, protozoa infections and others. Only reliable indication of a worm infection is identification of the worm or its eggs in the feces. Your veterinarian is best qualified to do this by a microscopic examination.

Coccidiosis is a major parasitic infection often mistaken for worm infestation. It is caused not by worms but tiny one-celled animals called coccidia, that invade the small intestine of young animals and destroy tissue as they multiply.

Coccidia thrive in dirty, overcrowded and damp living quarters where animal feces are allowed to accumulate. Young animals can ingest the parasite eggs as they groom their feet after walking across a dirty run. Pets also become infected by swallowing eggs or larvae deposited in food by flies and other insects.

Once infected, pets show symptoms of coccidiosis that are frequently confused with those of other intestinal diseases. Chronic diarrhea (often blood-tinged) is the key sign. Diarrhea causes the pet to become dehydrated, with listless eyes and no appetite. In more severe cases, the pet may show cold symptoms along with a slight fever.

Should you recognize the warning signs of the disease, medical treatment should be provided by your veterinarian. Haphazard administration of home remedies could worsen the condition. Worming your pet certainly is of no benefit. Many pets die each year when their owners treat the disease improperly or delay seeking treatment from a veterinarian. Proper medication must be provided in a dose determined on the basis of your pet's age, weight and general condition.

If the pet survives the primary infection without treatment, it can become a carrier for the disease. Suspected carriers must be treated, and their quarters and runs cleaned with a disinfectant.

Strict sanitation is the major factor in controlling and preventing coccidiosis. Kennels should be dry and clean; runs should receive sun part of each day and feces removed daily. Shaded, moist ground, although comfortable in warm weather, increasese survival of coccidia eggs and is not a good location for your pet's living quarters.

Coccidia have successfully developed parasitic relationships with a number of warm-blooded animals. Cattle, sheep, poultry and pets are all attacked by different varieties of coccidia. Dogs and cats are susceptible to infestation by three principal forms of parasite. Recovery from an attack by one form does not offer immunity to attacks by the other forms.

If you feel your pet has contracted coccidiosis, it is recommended that you contact your veterinarian promptly. Your pet's wakened condition will make it more susceptible to secondary infections such as pneumonia or distemper.

Former War Prisoners Get Dental Care

Former prisoners of war who were held in captivity for six months or more are now eligible for any dental care deemed necessary by the Veterans administration.

Also eligible are certain veterans whose service connected disabilities are permanently rated at 100 per cent.

Veterans who believe they may qualify for the expanded dental benefits should contact the VA health care facility nearest their place of residence for applications and assistance.

Dental treatment for former prisoners of war was previously limited to dental problems rated as service connected. New legislation — Public Law 96-22 — distinguishes between former POWs held captive for less than six months, and those who were prisoners for six months or more.

Short term prisoners are presumed not to have suffered irreparable dental damage while those held prisoner for six months or more are considered to have suffered such damage.

For this reason they are now eligible for any dental care, as determined necessary by VA, on an unlimited treatment basis.

Under certain conditions, veterans living in localities remote from VA health care facilities may be authorized treatment by private dentists.

These additional groups are eligible for VA dental care: veterans with compensable service connected dental conditions; veterans who apply within one year of discharge for treatment of service incurred dental conditions; veterans with non-compensable service connected dental conditions caused by trauma.

Also, those with service connected medical conditions which are professionally determined by the VA to be aggravated by a dental condition; certain veterans in VA rehabilitation programs; and veterans of conflicts prior to World War I, whose dental conditions are presumed to have been service connected.

Review Process For Mental Commitment

by Court Information Office
Minnesota Supreme Court

"The men in white coats are coming to take you away."

In reality the procedure for the involuntary confinement of the mentally ill is very different. Procedure which is designed by the legislature and implemented by the courts, starts when a petition is filed with the county probate court alleging that the person named in the petition is mentally ill, mentally deficient, or chemically dependent. A physician's statement must usually support the petition.

In 1977 approximately 3,800 such petitions were filed in the state. A survey of about one-third of the petitions for that year showed that the parents of the person sought to be committed most often brought the petition. Next in line were the spouse, a public official, other relatives, and an adult child. The average age for the proposed patients was 53 years; 32 per cent of them were younger than 30, reports the Minnesota supreme court information service.

Next step in the mental commitment process varies from county to county. Some counties, solely on the allegations in the petition, automatically order the person confined. Other counties have a screening process to screen out those who do not require immediate confinement. Still other counties automatically confine only if there is a showing that the individual is dangerous.

Whether the proposed patient is confined right away or not, a hearing must be held within 14 days of the filing of the petition. County court judge appoints two examiners. If the proposed patient has no representing attorney, the court also appoints an attorney. Examiners, one of whom must be a licensed physician, examine the patient before the hearing. Sometimes the examination is done several days before the hearing. In other counties, it is done on the morning of the hearing, and in still others, it is done immediately before the hearing. In the latter cases, it becomes difficult to distinguish the examination from the hearing.

When the person is an infant, is incompetent, or is unable to speak out for himself or herself the court often appoints a guardian ad litem who speaks and acts on behalf of the proposed patient. Some counties appoint a guardian ad litem in every commitment proceeding. When a guaradian ad litem is appointed, he or she assumes the additional role of the proposed patient's attorney.

Hearing, which may be held either in the courtroom or in the hospital comes after the examination. Formality of the proceedings often varies with the surroundings. Examiners' reports are presented at the hearing, and the proposed patient has an opportunity to be heard. At the conclusion of the hearing, the judge considers the available options and selects the least restrictive alternative. Petition may be dismissed, and the individual, if previously confined, is free to leave the hospital.

Or, the judge may decide there is enough evidence to issue a warrant to commit the person, but will hold off as long as the proposed patient agrees to certain conditions set by the court, such as voluntary treatment.

If the judge, however, feels that commitment is the least restrictive alternative available a warrant of commitment is issued. About one-half of all petitions filed in 1977 resulted in commitment.

Judge's warrant of commitment is then sent to the hospital or residential training center where the patient will be confined. This initial commitment is for 60 days for mental illness and 45 days for chemical dependency. During this time, the hospital must send a report to the court containing a diagnosis indicating whether the patient needs further care and treatment, whether commitment is necessary, and whether the patient is dangerous to the public. If the hospital does not send this report to the court, the commitment expires after the initial commitment period is over.

The judge reviews this report and determines if further commitment is necessary. Over half of the patients committed initially for 45 or 60 days in 1977 are committed indeterminately by a judge. This ends the contact between the patient and the courts, and the hospital now has the authority to determine when a patient should be released.

Last fall, the Courts completed a major state-wide study on the mental commitment process. This study made a number of recommendations to standardize and make the mental commitment process more equitable. New rules and laws in this area will be proposed in the coming months.

It took several hours of research work in the back files of the Thief River Falls Times, but a list of Lincoln high school hockey scorers was compiled for today's paper.

It's not a complete list yet. Single season scoring leaders have been assembled from the 1950-51 season through 1979-80. The 1944-45 season marked the beginning of high school hockey as an official sport under the supervision of the Minnesota State High School League.

A partial list of scoring leaders was kept by long-time Times sports editor Huck Olson and a time-consuming chore of going over game-by-game scoring summaries completed the task — from the 1950-51 season. Those figures from the 1944-45 through the 1949-50 seasons aren't as accesible. Hopefully they can be rounded up in the near future.

But even minus those early years school records are available since Olson had the single season and career scoring figures for Jack Erickson and Al Steenerson listed as records and nobody has topped those numbers yet.

An honest and well-intended effort was put into listing the scoring figures. But it may not be mistake-free. There are plenty of hockey history buffs around who might very well know something we haven't been able to uncover. Let us know about it and we'll try to verify the facts.

Miscellaneous

+ Selected by a player vote, Northland community college basketball team's all-opponent team during the 1979-80 season included Gary Douglas, Fergus Falls; Nelson Johnson, Golden Valley Lutheran; Jerry Williams, Golden Valley Lutheran; Keith Strickland, Crookston; and Roger Mertens, Lake Region. The Northmen named Golden Valley Lutheran, Lake Region and Fergus Falls as their toughest opponents.

+ Lincoln high school all-state guard Kyle Hams is the No. 1 area recruiting prospect for the Northland community college basketball team, reported Northland coach Chet Engelman who completed his seventh straight winning season this winter with a 17-9 finish (excluding seven forfeits against the likes of the Northland alumni and Winnipeg Independents) for a 10-year career record of 148-88 at the school. Northland's all-time basketball record is 173-159 over 15 years, including an 89-83 Northwest Division mark, which includes a 12-game winning streak against area rival Crookston dating back to the 1973-74 season. Northland's 83-82 victory at Crookston this winter was the only game in the Northwest Division won by a visiting team.

+ Brainerd graduate Mike Morgan has been named to succeed Dick Juillerat as Brainerd high school basketball coach. The St. Cloud State graduate served as an assistant coach under Juillerat who coached the Warriors to a Region 8AA title in 1979.

+ Doug Hiney, who has served two years as head hockey coach at Mount St. Benedict high school in Crookston, has resigned that position.

+ Scott Boelter, the second-leading scorer in the 1979-80 Brainerd high school hockey team, will attend Lincoln high school next year after the closing of the Scorpion snowmobile plant in Crosby brought his father back to Arctic Enterprises in Thief River Falls.

+ Bob Clauson, Elliot Solheim and Tom Johannson were named tri-winners of the Crookston high school hockey team most valuable player award.

+ Bemidji, 7-7 against Section 8 high school hockey opponents during the 1979-80 season but 0-8 against demanding competition outside northwestern Minnesota, will nevertheless play the same opponents next winter, with the exception of Cloquet. Bemidji coach Bryan Grand, speaking at the Lumberjacks' team banquet, emphasized the only way to reach the top is to face top opposition. You will learn more even in defeat than by overwhelming patsies, he said, adding that it's also difficult to alter your schedule each year to meet your talent flow. Seniors Brian Olson and Brian Murphy were named co-winners of the Jon Beck memorial award, named in honor of a former Bemidji junior high school student who died in a hunting mishap, and presented each year to the team's most dedicated player.

Top Five Career Scoring Leaders (1951-1980)

Jack Erickson, 1947-48, 1951-52	114	54	168
Al Steenerson, 1947-48, 1951-52	91	63	154

Jeff Bottem, 1969-70, 1972-73	40	61	101
Tom Goddard, 1970-71, 1972-73	51	39	90
Wade Hoppe, 1977-78, 1979-80	39	51	90

Hoppe, named to the All-Section 8 team, scored 27 goals and collected 35 assists during the 1979-80 season, when he served as co-captain of the Prowlers along with Geatz. The 62 points ranks as the third highest single season point total in Lincoln hockey history.

Dale Wennberg holds the Thief River Falls single season scoring record with 70 points he collected during the 1959-60 season when he scored 37 goals and added 33 assists. Jack Erickson ranks second in the Prowlers' single season scoring charts with 42 goals, 26 assists and 68 points in 1950-51.

Erickson is also the Lincoln career scoring leader with 114 goals, 54 assists and 168 points during a five-year career with the Prowlers that began in 1947-48 and continued through the 1951-52 season.

Al Steenerson, a teammate of Erickson all five years, ranks second on the all-time Thief River Falls scoring charts with 91 goals, 63 assists and 154 points. That gave the Erickson-Steenerson combination 205 goals with the Prowlers.

Wennberg ranks third on the career scoring list with 145 points from 1956-57 through the 1959-60 season. Jeff Bottem, who played from the 1969-70 through the 1972-73 season, is the only other Thief River Falls player with 100 or more career points. He finished with 101. Hoppe's banner 1979-80 season gave a two-year varsity career total of 90 points, tying him with Tom Goddard for fifth place in the record books.

Erickson's 42 goals during the 1950-51 season represents a single season goal-scoring record and his 114 career goals naturally ranks him first in that category, too.

Others with 30 or more goals in a single season include Wennberg, 37 in 1959-60; Erickson, 37 in 1951-52; Jerry Jorgenson, 33 in 1958-59; and Joe Poole, 30 in 1954-55.

Hoppe's 35 assists this winter gives him a share of the single season Lincoln assist record with Scott Reed who set up that many goals during the 1973-74 season.

Wennberg, with 33 in 1959-60, and Bottem, with 31 in 1972-73, are the only other Prowlers with 30 or more assists in a single season.

Steenerson is the all-time Lincoln assist leader with 63. Bottem finished with 61 and Wennberg had 59.

Hoppe centered one of the highest scoring lines in Lincoln hockey history this winter. Jeff Ulrich scored 21 goals and had 26 assists for 47 points and Jim Thompson scored 17 goals while adding 22 assists despite a football injury that slowed him down. Those three did over half of the Prowlers' scoring, getting 65 of the team's 116 goals and collecting 148 of the team's 249 points.

Still the Prowlers had problems. After a 10-3 start produced visions of a state tournament berth for the first time since 1965, the team ran into injury and sickness and slumped badly in February when the Prowlers won just twice in seven starts.

Post-season play began with an 8-0 win over Alexandria but ended with a 5-3 loss to Roseau in the 1980 Section 8 tournament semifinals to end the Prowlers' year at 13-8-1.

Regular season wins for coach Wendell Grand's Prowlers were posted over Mount St. Benedict 7-3, Fergus Falls 6-1, Bemidji 8-2 and 5-0, Grand Forks Red River 10-4, Lake of the Woods, 8-4, Grand Forks Central 6-4, Roseau 4-0, Warroad 6-1, East Grand Forks 4-2, Hallock 11-1 and Detroit Lakes 5-0. Losses came at the hands of Fargo South 5-3, East Grand Forks 4-3 in overtime, Greenway-Coleraine 4-3 in overtime, Crookston 5-2, Roseau 6-2, Warroad 7-5 and Fergus Falls 2-1. The tie was a 6-6 overtime draw with Moorhead.

The season-ending loss to Roseau lengthened the Prowlers' 21 years of tournament frustration and clouded several noteworthy accomplishments: A superb performance in a 10-4 rout of highly regarded Grand Forks Red River team; a 4-0 shutout of Roseau on the Rams' ice; the scoring feats of Hoppe, Ulrich and Thompson; the strong defensive play and hip checks by Geatz; and the goaltending of Jury who finished his three-year career as the Prowlers' regular netminder with a 3.1 goals-against average that was highlighted by a mid-season stretch when he shut out Roseau 4-0, beat Warroad 6-1 and blanked Bemidji 5-0 in a six-day span.

Thief River Falls will suffer heavy graduation losses this year, with 10 seniors on the Prowlers' tournament team, including the top seven scorers and Jury. Defenseman Scott Wiebolt will be the Prowlers' top returning scorer next winter, and he did not score a goal this season. Jeff Mongoven is the heir apparent in goal as he stepped in for Jury when he was plagued by back problems this year and played in four late-season games that included a 5-0 shutout of Detroit Lakes and an 11-1 victory over Hallock.

Coached by Dave Peterson, the Lincoln junior varsity finished with a 15-4-1 record this year.

Lead Poisoning Is Cause Of Duck Deaths

Deaths of a significant, but unknown, number of mallard ducks at Heron Lake in southwestern Minnesota this winter was caused by the ingestion of lead shotgun pellets, the Department of Natural Resources reported.

In mid-February a count of ducks in the river that flows through the marsh area adjacent to North Heron Lake revealed between 120,000 and 150,000 mallards, an unusually large concentration of ducks in the area for that time of the year.

Lead poisoning, a problem long recognized by waterfowl specialists, occurs when ducks eat the pellets while they are picking up grit. The pellets enter the gizzard and become toxic after they are broken down and enter the bird's system.

More than 100 dead ducks were observed the first part of February, and several dead and sick birds were picked up as samples for laboratory tests by the DNR.

Area wildlife managers said many sick birds had doubtless crawled into heavy cover and died unseen.

States Receive FWS Money For Fish Projects

Interior Department's U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) has announced the 1980 grant-in-aid allocation to states for work with anadromous fish.

Several species of andromous fish have been successfully introduced and became established in the Great Lakes. Anadromous fish, such as salmon and steelhead, are those which historically have spent most of their adult life in the oceans, but which returned to coastal freshwater streams for spawning. The newly hatched fish may spend up to one or two years in these freshwater streams before migrating to the ocean, where they grow to adult size.

The following amounts have been allotted to anadromous fish programs in the upper Great Lakes states:

Illinois, $40,000; Indiana, $118,600; Michigan, $380,600; Minnesota, $87,800; Ohio, $41,500; Wisconsin, $307,500.

Purpose of the anadromous fish conservation program, an act of Congress passed in 1965, is to improve the stocks and habitat of anadromous fish for the benefit of commercial and sport fishing.

To accomplish this broad goal, state fisheries agencies and the FWS work to develop plans for anadromous fish on a state, regional or watershed basis. These plans take into account the multiple uses and stresses of the fishery resource and related natural resource programs.

Research is also encouraged, especially in the area of habitat improvement, overcoming obstacles to fish movement, and improvement of andromous fish management techniques.

Past emphasis has been placed on the production and stocking of fish through the program, but habitat improvement and expansion are increasing concerns of the program in the Great Lakes.

Young Animals Should Be Left In The Woods

People who pick up young wild animals are in most cases reducing the animals' chances for survival in the wild and are in violation of state regulations, according to the Department of Natural Resources.

Every spring DNR offices are flooded with calls from people who have picked up young wild birds and animals. Most callers are convinced that the young have been abandoned by their mothers or that they will make good pets.

Wildlife officials said that these people are often wrong on both counts. Wild animals are rarely abandoned by their mothers, and seldom make good pets.

Finding a young wild creature alone in field or forest does not necessarily mean it has been abandoned, say wildlife specialists. The mother may be nearby waiting for people to leave so that she may return to take care of her offspring.

For some young wild animals, getting picked up by humans who know little about their specialized requirements, means an early agonizing death.

Less specialized animals, which live in spite of their captive care, may grow from the cute and cuddly stage to be nuisances — vicious and even dangerous to their captors.

Unfortunately, the slight tameness and dependance on humans learned in captivity usually prevents their successful return to the wild.

Do wildlife a big favor, said wildlife specialists. Remember that young wild animals should be left in the wild and should not be picked up by people.

DNR enforcement officials also point out that possession of protected wildlife species out of season is a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine of up to $500.

Reward Offered For Information On Wolf Killers

A wildlife conservation group has offered a reward of up to $500 "for information leading to the conviction of a person or persons who have killed or possess an illegally killed wild wolf in Minnesota, Michigan or Wisconsin."

The reward offer was made by the North American wildlife part foundation in the December edition of its newsletter "The Predator".

Minnesota wildlife officials said they learned of the reward offer through a news release issued by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Robert Hodgins, special agent in charge of law enforcement for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's north central region, said he believes the offer "will ultimately serve as a deterrent by exposing those who tinker with wildlife laws and commit wolf violations.

"We encourage people who have information to call our office at any time, or they may call the nearest federal or state wildlife enforcement official to report violations.

"We'll do the investigative work; all the caller has to do is to give us the information and we will take it from there."

Telephone number of the Fish and Wildlife Service regional law enforcement office is 612-725-3530.

No. 1 Ranked Prowlers Face Pirates Thursday

Tennis Team Begins TRF Spring Sports Schedule

Lincoln high school tennis team, No. 1 ranked in the state Class AA polls, begins its quest for a fourth consecutive unbeaten dual meet season Thursday when the Prowlers face Crookston in a 4:30 p.m. season-opening match at the Grand Forks Tennis Center.

The match will kick off the 1980 Thief River Falls spring sports season for Lincoln high school and Northland community college teams.

Thief River Falls has not lost a regular season dual meet decision since May 10, 1976 and will take a string of 27 straight wins into the match against the Pirates. The Prowlers won their final three regular season dual meet outings in 1976, then went 11-0 in 1977, 6-0 in 1978 and 7-0 in 1979. If counted as double duals as some schools do, a bundle of triangular meet victories over the past three years would have nearly doubled the Prowlers' dual meet victory total that would have been 13-0 last year under that arrangement.

The cast of characters is familiar, but positions are unsettled at this point, said Thief River Falls coach Whitey Olson.

Bill Jury and Mitch Rustad will be in their accustomed No. 1 and No. 2 singles spots tomorrow and a doubles combination of Bill Holmes and Mark Lundin is set. Mark Collins, Tom Bjorkman and Paul Koppang will round out the line-up, but Olson doesn't know which of the three will be at No. 3 singles for the opener.

Jury, Rustad, Holmes, Bjorkman and Collins are all seniors. Lundin and Koppang are juniors. With the exception of Koppang, a transfer students from the San Diego, Calif. area, they were all members of last year's Region 8AA championship Thief River Falls team that lost a 3-2 first round state tournament decision to a Virginia team that went on to a runner-up finish in the Class AA team finals.

Whitey Olson

In fact, Jury, Rustad and Bjorkman were freshmen regulars in 1977 when the Prowlers began their current string of three straight unbeaten dual meet regular season finishes.

The Prowlers have made three state tournament appearances in the past five years, winning a Region 8 title in 1975, taking the Section 8 crown in 1978 and claiming the Region 8AA prize last spring. Jury was a Section 8 singles champion in 1978, and Region 8AA singles champion in 1979 and a Section 8 runner-up in 1977. He's currently the No. 2 ranked singles player in the Class AA rankings behind Chris Coombs of Edina West. Rustad is No. 7.

Rest of the 1980 season openers for Lincoln high school spring sports teams include:

+ Boys track — Tues., April 8, at the Northwest Athletic Conference indoor meet in the Winter Shows building at Crookston, 4 p.m.

+ Girls track — Mon., April 14, at Crookston, 4 p.m.

+ Baseball — Thurs., April 17, at Red Lake Falls, 4:30 p.m.; with the home opener planned the following day against Bagley, 4:30 p.m.

+ Boys golf — Tues., April 22, at Crookston, 9:30 a.m.

+ Girls golf — Mon., April 28, at Moorhead, 10 a.m.

SKI REPORT

by Dr. Hugh Patterson

Since we are nearing the end of our ski trip, this is a good time to discuss some of the problems of such a trip. It has always been my object to help our regular readers have the wonderful experience we have had. How can you bring the trip within hour budget?

The major expenses are travel, lodging and tow fees. The last is tied to the cost of operation and is the same for all comers. Tow fees are lower in some of the world's finest areas in the Utah area. Travel expense is reduced by taking as many persons as possible per vehicle.

By careful management, lodging costs can be reduced and they may otherwise be very expensive. We mentioned before our camping out, which is inexpensive and convenient, but does require proper equipment and lots of know how. We also mentioned Paul Paetzold's camp near Grand Targhee, where you bring your own sleeping bag and pillow. Places like this are picturesque and comfrotable.

Another solution is illustrated by the Haystack Lodge at Steamboat Springs. They have 50 rooms for four people that are adequate but without frills. We have enjoyed staying there for several years. The rate is $35 a night for four people. If you just ask for a bed that is open in a room it is $10 per person per day.

Steamboat Springs, in northern Colorado, is a truly great ski area. Its base elevation is 7,000 feet and that is the reason it is the only area in Colorado that I recommend for people from our lower elevations. Other Colorado areas are 1,000 to 4,000 feet higher at the base, and at those elevations you just will not have as much fun, because of less oxygen. For "mature" skiers it may be dangerous — even younger skiers can develop high altitude pulmonary edema, which can be dangerous.

When you stand on the top of Storm Peak, among those beautiful snow covered trees, and in that wonderful mountain scene, you have 3,600 feet of vertical skiing under you. Jewell came there with me, and skied all that way down. The runs may be steep, but they have lots of room and the snow and snow dressing was excellent. I skied it from the top four times that day.

Steamboat has 12 excellent snow dressing machines and they use them well. They are careful to duplicate any chair that has long waiting lines. My longest wait was eight minutes. The low fee is $15. Their season is from about December 1 to mid-April.

Steamboat Springs has been recently sold to a group from Denver. Future plans are to add six more lifts to the 16 they now have. The Sheraton hotel is adding 120 rooms. My interview was with Jeannie Ramseier, director of media relations.

Steamboat Springs is the nearest and best of the great ski areas to our area. It is excellent for skiers of all skills.

Public Waters, Wetlands Are Being Mapped

Minnesota's inventory of public waters and wetlands is proceeding smoothly, according to Larry Keymour, Director of the Department of natural resources, division of waters.

As of March 7, 35 counties in southwest and west central Minnesota were reviewing maps showing the water basins and stream segments which fit the definition of "public waters" and "wetlands".

"The designation of public waters and wetlands is important," said Seymour, "since it delineates where a DNR waters permit must be obtained when work is planned affecting these water resources.

"It also identifies wetlands eligible for the state water bank, under which landowners are compensated for preservation of water areas. Designation does not affect existing laws and regulations on access, trespass, accident liability and land ownership."

County board, watershed district and soil and water conservation district, review preliminary maps prepared by the division of waters. The general public also has the opportunity to provide their input at the public information meeting held in each county.

Preliminary maps for the remainder of the state should be completed by the end of 1980, Seymour said. These with questions concerning this program can call the DNR division of waters at (612) 296-4800 for more information.

Twins Begin 1980 Baseball Ticket Sales

Minnesota Twins' ticket office is now accepting over-the-counter and charge card orders for all 1980 regular season homes games.

Mail orders are also being accepted by the Twins for all home games, which begin with Rod Carew, Don Baylor, Bobby Grich and their California Angels mates Tues., April 22, at 1:15 p.m.

Steps Are Taken To Aid Wildlife

Modern agriculture provides more food than the world has ever known, but much wildlife habitat has been lost in the process, says Jim Kitts, University of Minnesota extension wildlife specialist.

"We have destroyed cover by draining wetlands, bulldozing windbreaks and fence rows and farming nearly all of the available land," Kitts explains. "Economic realities have forced farmers to plant crops that provide little protection for wildlife."

The public has a stake in preserving habitat for ducks and geese, ring-neck pheasants, deer and all other wildlife species, Kitts adds. That's why new or revived government programs use tax dollars and hunting fees to help landowners improve wildlife habitat.

Minnesota hunting license fees help pay the landowner's costs through the wildlife habitat improvement program, reports Larry Nelson of the state department of natural resources (DNR). "Since 1967, thousands of landowners have signed simple one-page agreements that spell out what the individual will do and the funding he or she will receive," he says.

The property owner works with the DNR area wildlife manager to draw up a plan that includes one or more of the following practices:

—Building a shallow water impoundment or restoring a wetland; tree-planting around buildings or fields (10 rows or more with four rows of evergreens); providing nesting cover that must be maintained for at least five years, and providing food plots of corn or sorghum on farmland for birds, or browse for deer in forested areas.

"The landowner works with one person at one agency for several cost-sharing opportunities," Nelson adds. "The plans are tailor-made for the individual farm."

Soil and water conservation districts in the state share the cost of practices meant to reduce soil erosion. Many of these practices, such as planting field windbreaks and grass cover, also improve wildlife habitat.

Landowners are encouraged not to drain wetlands through a new state tax law. Starting this year, landowners are exempt from paying property taxes on wetlands that could be drained for crop production. County auditors are also instructed to reduce the owner's total property tax bill by three-fourths of one per cent of the average value of cropland in the township for each acre of wetland on the landowner's property.

Property owners who wish to take advantage of the wetlands exemption and credit must agree not to drain the wetland during that year. County assessors have details. The state must reimburse counties for tax revenues lost and credits paid.

"One of the most popular federal programs is the Federal Water Bank," Nelson says. Landowners are paid annually for 10 years to preserve and improve their wetlands and adjacent acreage. Payments are reviewed and may be adjusted after five years.

Water bank funding is administered through the county office of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation service (ASCS). The Soil Conservation Service (SCS) provides technical help.

(The state also has a water bank program, but is is open only to farmers who are denied a permit to drain wetlands designated as public waters. Payment rate is five per cent of the appraised value of the land per year.)

The ASCS also shares the cost of habitat improvement through the Agricultural Conservation program (ACP). SCS provides technical assistance.

"We know of farmers who, through careful planning and combining of programs, have come close to the income they made cropping the land," Nelson says. "They save labor, machinery and chemical costs as well in most cases. Hunting leases and fur-trapping can bring in added income."

"Wetlands preservation does more than provide a home for ducks," Nelson adds. "Ponds and marshes trap water-borne soil and plant nutrients that otherwise pollute our waterways. They help recharge the ground-water supply. Their ability to store water lowers the frequency and intensity of flooding."

For details on improving wildlife habitat, contact your area wildlife manager. These professionals know about all the state and federal incentive programs and are housed at area or regional offices of the Minnesota DNR. County extension agents can also help locate governmental offices and personnel for specific programs.

Helpful publications available from the U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C., 20402 are, "Making Land Produce Useful Wildlife", Farmers' Bulletin No. 2035; and "Ponds and Marshes for Wild Ducks on Farms and Ranches in the Northern Plains," Farmers' Bulletin No. 2234.

Plummer Ball Club Is Led By Fisher, Zimpel

Diane Fisher was the top attraction, but Sandy Zimpel also played well this winter as the Plummer girls high school basketball team produced a 15-6 third place finish in District 31.

Fisher got the headlines by completing a record-breaking high school basketball career with 1,353 points. She scored 509 of them this season when she averaged 24 points and 11 rebounds per game. She also led the Cardinals with 105 loose ball recoveries and 65 assists.

Zimpel played a key role in the Cardinals success, too, as she scored 186 points, averaging nine points and seven rebounds per game during the 1979-80 season. She was the team's top percentage shooter from the field, hitting 80 of 155 shots for 51 per cent. Fisher put it up more often, though, drilling 202 of 439 shots for 46 per cent. Fisher was also the top free throw shooter, sinking 105 of 177 attempts for 58 per cent while Zimpel had second-best figures of 26-for-48 for 54 per cent.

Both Plummer seniors were named to the 1980 All-District 31 basketball team that also included seniors Kim Brekke, Jill Carlson and Jodi Carlson, Warren; senior Fran Kuznia and sophomore Bonnie Borowicz, Stephen; senior Julie Ripp, East Grand Forks Sacred Heart; junior Char Remick, Red Lake Falls; junior Susan Zola, Oslo, sophomore Mary Biermaier, Mount St. Benedict; sophomore Mary Jo Kiesow, Goodridge; junior Kelly Knox, Fisher; junior Lida Kathman, Argyle; and eighth grader Liz Holz, Alvarado.

Mary Westlake matched Zimpel's nine-point scoring average this winter, but she missed several late-season games for the Cardinals because of an injury.

Plummer posted regular season wins this winter over Mount St. Benedict 37-32 and 66-45, Gonvick 57-37, Alvarado 49-48, Marshall County Central 50-37, Red Lake Falls 56-55 and 74-34, Oslo 38-36, East Grand Forks Sacred Heart 43-35, Oklee 74-42, Strandquist 52-45, Argyle 54-41 and Middle River 54-47. The Cardinals lost to Fisher 37-36, Goodridge 47-46, Stephen 66-55, Warren 54-45 and Alvarado 57-48.

In District 31 tournament play Plummer opened with a 40-30 victory over Stephen, lost a 57-41 decision to eventual Region 8A champion Warren in the semifinals but came back to take a 58-49 triumph over Fisher in the third place game.

The Rick Koivisto-coached Cardinals averaged 48.5 points per game offensively and 44.4 points per game defensively. A strong-shooting ball club, Plummer shot 43 per cent from the field and 52 per cent from the free throw line.

New Fishing Organization Is Created

With the future of sport fishing threatened by pollutants, anti-fishing groups and commercial fishing interests, anglers from fishing clubs in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin recently organized to join forces with the American sportfishing federation (ASF) campaign to save fishing.

The new federation is calling for the support of all anglers to form a strong national voice. A $10 membership in ASF automatically includes affiliation with state chapters. New members joining ASF will receive a booklet filled with more than 100 coupons for cash rebates on brand name fishing tackle including rods, reels, tackle boxes, fishing line, lures and depth finders.

The coupon booklet offer is part of a drive by members of the American fishing tackle manufacturers association to launch the federation. AFTMA president Paul Mulready explained:

"The worsening state of the fishery has resulted in less people fishing, evidenced by a decline in fishing license sales. Fewer people fishing results in less money available for protection and enhancement of the fishery. This critical decay of a precious national resource can only be stopped through a unified public information and action force."

Noise Barriers On Highways Effective

Highway noise barriers are an effective method of reducing traffic noise in residential areas, according to a study completed by the Minnesota department of transportation (Mn-DOT).

Mn-DOT commissioner Richard P. Braun said the report shows the barriers reduce overall noise levels by 50 per cent on the 34.4 miles of state highways and freeways where they have been constructed in the Twin Cities metropolitan area.

Study was ordered by the Minnesota legislature in 1978 after it imposed a moratorium on the construction of noise barriers on existing highways. Legislature directed Mn-DOT to study the effect of the noise barriers on noise reduction and property values, to examine other means for noise reduction, to evaluate all areas in the metropolitan area along highways where state noise levels are exceeded and to recommend appropriate sound abatement measures.

Construction of the noise barriers was authorized by the legislature in 1975 when it mandated use of one per cent of Minnesota's gas tax revenues to meet federal and state noise abatement standards in residential areas adjacent to highways.

Braun said the moratorium was imposed because legislators questioned the effectiveness and expense of the noise barrier projects. Cost for constructing 24.6 miles of barriers on existing highways was $17.9 million under the 1975 program. Federal funds provided 90 per cent of the costs, leaving Minnesota's cost at about $1.8 million. The program is 90 per cent complete.

Additional 10 miles of barriers were constructed before 1975 or as part of new highway construction.

Remaining 10 per cent of noise barrier construction authorized by the 1975 program will be submitted to local communities for approval or rejection. However, commissioner Braun noted construction of any new sound barriers along existing highways will occur only upon explicit authorization by the legislature.

Although the moratorium affects placement of barriers on existing highways, barriers are being built with new freeway construction to satisfy state and federal noise and environmental standards, he said.

In addressing the request of the legislature, the study concludes that the barriers, (1) have not had a negative impact on the value of adjacent residential property, (2) have support from people living near them and (3) effectively reduce noise.

Study also identifies 194 miles of residential area along state highways in the seven-county metropolitan area where state noise standards are exceeded and examines alternative noise abatement techniques.

Randy Halvorson, manager of the environmental policy section, Mn-DOT, said a study of numerous residential areas adjacent to the noise barriers showed a reduction in sound levels of at least 10 decibels, the equivalent of reducing by one-half the level of noise reaching the human ear.

"Our conclusion," said Halvorson, "is that barriers are the single most effective device for reducing noise currently available to Mn-DOT. However, if you combine other noise reduction techniques, the cumulative effect may exceed that of barriers."

Halvorson, noted, however, that other noise reduction techniques such as changes in type of pavement, traffic management or use of trees or other vegetation may not always be possible.

For example, he said traffic management strategies which improve traffic flow may increase traffic speeds which, in turn, could increase noise depending on the traffic mix.

Changes in noise-reduction measures may also be affected if state noise standards are nodified by the Minnesota pollution control agency (MPCA). MPCA is now reviewing state noise standards which are the most stringent in the country, Halvorson said.

Because Mn-DOT has concluded that meeting state standards at residential locations on state trunk highways may not ebe technically or economically feasible in all circumstances, commissioner Braun said some adjustment in the standards may be warranted.

Halvorson said the most effective way for local governments to reduce impact of noise on residential areas is by effective land use planning—locating housing away from highly travelled highways and expressways.

He added that the survey indicated residents' feelings about living with the barriers varied depending on whether they are renters or owners and on other factors. Halvorson indicated overall the residents believe the barriers effectively reduce traffic noise and have a neutral to positive effect on property values.

According to the study, construction of the barriers has not affected the list and selling prices of homes or extended the time necessary to sell them compared with similar homes in the area.

Residents' attitudes about the construction of barriers have been considered from the outset of the planning process, Halvorson said, and final approval for barrier construction was made by the affected municipalities.

Municipalities rejected 7.5 miles of proposed barrier construction in the seven-county metropolitan area.

Congress Okays Bill To Assist Farmers In Debt

Credit problems have been devastating for the farmers this year, but they received support from Congress Thursday when the House of Representatives passed overwhelmingly a conference report extending agricultural loans under the economic emergency loan program.

"This legislation is not the answer to the farmer's problems," said Congressman Stangeland, "but I voted for it and encouraged my colleagues to do likewise because it will help the farmer survive this credit crunch.

"What we really need are higher farm prices which will allow farmers to repay their loans and earn a profit for their efforts and legislation to index the price support loan program therefore allowing price support levels to increase the same rate as inflation. I would also like to see price support levels increased immediately so as to provide the farmer with sufficient cash flow."

The conference report on the economic emergency loan program, which was previously approved by the Senate, increases the ceiling on the total amount of loans that may be outstanding from $4 billion to $6 billion. In addition, it states that the maximum interest loans to farmers will be retained at the cost to the government plus one per cent which may be added at the discretion of the secretary of agriculture. The loan program will be administered by the Farmers Home administration and is expected to assist those farmers most in need who have difficulty acquiring credit through normal channels.

"Credit is a necessity for the farmer," Stangeland said, "but it doesn't do any good to have additional credit programs if the farmer is not going to be able to show a profit using the loan and ultimately pay back the loan."

The Seventh District Congressman added that he is encouraging other members of Congress to support this bill to roll back interest rates to reasonable levels as one means of improving credit for the farmers. He also says he is cosponsoring legislation to establish a national usury law whereby interest rates may not be assessed at more than 10 per cent per year on loans in excess of $300. Both measures would also help other segments of the economy deal with high interest rates.

"Our farmers cannot continue to pay these high interest rates for money they need to operate. Their fuel costs are twice as high this year as last, fertilizer has increased in price and virtually everything required for operation is forcing the profit margin of the farmer to new lows. Unless an agricultural program is established by congress and the administration, the farmer and the nation's agricultural well-being will continue to suffer. That is the key. We must work for an improved, strong and innovative agricultural program for the farm community," Stangeland said.

Governor Signs New Contract For Deed Law

"More homes should be bought and sold on the Minnesota housing market after May 1, 1980. This is the day a new law will go into effect allowing interest rates on contract for deeds to float to the same rate as conventional loans," states Gov. Al Quie.

"I signed the contract for deed bill last week because I believe removing the eight per cent interest ceiling will stimulate the housing market. Much of the mortgage money in the lending institutions has dried up due to higher interest rates and the uncertain economy."

The new law (authored by Sen. Collin Petersen and Rep. Jim Evans, both of Detroit Lakes) will make contracts for deed more attractive to sellers, which will likely mean more houses on the market.

Because conventional loan rates are now around 14.6 per cent, few sellers are willing to sell their houses on a contract for deed yielding eight per cent interest. The new law will allow sellers and buyers the flexibility to negotiate a contract with an interest rate agreeable to both participants. It does not stipulate that the seller must use the conventional interest rate, rather that the interest rate can be at that rate or anywhere below it.

The new law also makes default provisions more acceptable to buyers. Current law says that a seller may terminate a contract for deed for default 30 days after serving notice if less than 30 per cent of the loan has been paid off; 60 days after serving notice if 30 to 50 per cent has been paid and 90 days if 50 per cent or more has been paid. The new law says the seller can terminate the contract after 30 days if less than 10 per cent has been paid; 60 days if 10 to 25 per cent has been paid; and 90 days if 25 per cent or more has been paid. These changes, too, will be effective May 1, 1980.

"There is little that can be done at the state level to change the economic climate of our nation. But this law is one way we can make it easier for Minnesotans to cope with the pressures of inflation," Gov. Quie said.

Don't tell a soul

Thank God Easter is no secret!

The very word "Gospel" means good news.

We use that word to summarize the belief of millions that Jesus Christ is God's Son and our Savior — that He suffered, died and rose again for us.

The reason so many today share our Faith is that the followers of Jesus have always tried to tell every soul the good news.

That is why we want to tell you and share with you our Easter joy.

Depression Art In National Exhibit

by Margery Byers
Smithsonian News Service

Some were packaged by the pound and sold as junk, purchased as scrap paper for prison inmates or abandoned in wastebaskets and trash piles. But other paintings, murals, drawings and sculptures produced under government sponsorship during the New Deal have somehow survived decades of neglect to resurface and win new interest.

That the artistic reminders of the Depression were forgotten or lost for so long is not surprising. The Great Depression was a desolate and seemingly hopeless period in U.S. history.

By March of 1933, 14 million people — one-quarter of the labor force — were out of work. Banks closed, factories were shut down and one-time members of the middle class sold apples on street corners.

At a time of bread lines and soup kitchens, art was a luxury. Artist O. Louis Guglielmi later wrote: "The artist, a highly sensitive person, found himself helplessly a part of a devastated world. Faced with the terror of the realities of the day, he could no longer justify the shaky theiry of individualism."

The new President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, declared a New Deal to defeat the Great Depression and to provide jobs for the unemployed. And, despite protests from some who considered art frivolous, sculptors, painters and printmakers were included in the various projects, such as the WPA (Works Progress Administration). "They have to eat, just like other people," said Harry Hopkins, FDR's influential aide.

They didn't eat particularly well. They were paid as little as $25 a month. Often they had to pool their funds to rent communal lofts where they lived and worked.

But they did produce — everything from drawings to bronzes. Tens of thousands of works produced under the WPA programs were hung on the walls of hospitals, schools, colleges, libraries, armories, courthouses and even prisons. Murals and sculptures commissioned by the treasury department decorated federal buildings.

Many of the artists subsisting in the cold lofts on their meager WPA allotments echoed the nation's sense of despair and disillusionment in their works. Others reflected a more secure past by celebrating rural America and the American traditions.

Those who explored cubism and abstraction shocked some people. "It's all right to feed the artists," one prominent woman of the period said, "but we shouldn't have to look at their stuff."

Some works had a short life. A WPA administrator in New York City burned hundreds of drawings and paintings in an incinerator because he considered them not only trash but subversive as well — they were concerned with social justice and the unionization of labor, favorite topics among some of the artists of the period.

But other paintings and prints were saved — some at the last minute, others almost by accident. One group was sold for heating pipe insulation, but the contractor discovered that, when heated, oil paint drips. Luckily, a new York restorer and framemaker heard about the contractor's dilemma and paid $5 each for more than 300 paintings.

Among them were works by artists later to become distinguished abstract expressionists — seven Mark Rothkos, five Jackson Pollocks and three Adolph Gottliebs.

When World War II reduced unemployment sharply and the WPA office in New York closed forever in 1943, there was a surplus sale and one wastebasket sold for 50 cents, with the buyer required to take its contents. Many years later, the contents — 12 lithographs — were mailed to the general services administration in a shoebox.

Much of the work in preserving and restoring the New Deal art of the '30s has been carried out by the Smithsonian's national collection of fine arts in Washington. The effort began more than a decade ago with a phone call to the museum, then in the process of reformation, from someone at the U.S. department of labor offering "old paintings."

Following up on the phone call, museum curators found a number of federal art works of the '30s in offices and back corridors. Many more were stacked, some with broom handles poking through them, in what was described at the time as "a cross between a storage area and a coal bin."

The Smithsonian museum arranged for the transfer of these paintings, and they became the nucleus of its extensive collection of more than 1,500 examples of Depression art. Because the aid programs were under the direction of the treasury department or the WPA, the majority of these works were "rescued" by the general services administration and given to the national collection.

Many were unvarnished and covered with dirt, grime and grease. Restoring them to exhibition quality required both hard work and unusual cleaning processes, for, with money scarce in the '30s, inferior paints often were used.

Many of these paintings were shown recently in a special NCFA exhibition, "After the Crash," timed to the 50th anniversary of the 1929 stock market collapse — and a selection is always on view in a permanent gallery. A concurrent show of key political, financial and industrial leaders involved in the crash was held at the Smithsonian's national protrait gallery.

Asian Student Enrollment Up At "U" M

Many of the thousands of Indochinese refugees entering the United States are enrolling at American colleges and universities. At the University of Minnesota, the winter quarter enrollment of Asian students has made theirs the largest minority group on campus.

There were 834 Asian students registered winter quarter, a drop of only 10 Asian students from fall quarter.

The slight decline in Asian enrollment was much less than the drop from fall to winter experienced by the other minority groups on campus, said Nobuya Tsuchida, director of the university's Asian-Pacific American learning resource center. For instance, the decline in black enrollment from fall to winter was nearly 100 students, Tsuchida said.

There is some chance that the number of Asian students enrolled may actually be higher, he said. "There are many Asian students who are miscounted as being black or American Indian, or are not counted at all," he said.

Refugees from Indochina are considered aliens with permanent resident status. The enrollment of Asian students is expected to increase still further, Tsuchida said.

"They are good students, are highly motivated, and have respect for education," he said. "The students and their families see education as one of the best tools for survival and integration into society. Last fall, the largest number of minority-group students enrolled in the graduate school and the institute of technology were Asians."

Students who are Indochinese refugees have different educational needs than do other minority-group students, Tsuchida said. The first group of refugees to enroll were those who were wealthy enough to leave their home country, and were often well-educated people already. After studying English, most of these are able to continue their education without much trouble.

But the second group of refugees — the boat people — have not had the same educational opportunities and are unprepared for school, he said. Most attend schools in their new home communities before coming to the university.

Many Asian ethnic groups harbor historical animosities toward each other and speak different languages. The work-study students at the center, who come from several different ethnic backgrounds, can help sort out the differences and are extremely helpful in dealing with students from different backgrounds, Tsuchida said.

The work of the center is made more difficult by the lack of any body of information to work from. "There has been no research done on the Asian student," Tsuchida said. "The Indochinese and Vietnamese distrust questions and don't want to be asked about the past."

Besides working with Indochinese students, the Asian center works with students from the Far East, Southeast Asia, the Indian subcontinent, the Pacific Islands, China, Japan, Korea, the Philippines and Samoa.

A number of activities are offered each quarter by the center, and several hundred students have turned out for planned events so far this year. A spring quarter conference, for instance, will examine the idea of compensation for Japanese-Americans who were detained in camps during World War II.

Congressman Bruce Vento and Minoru Yasui, a Japanese-American lawyer who has challenged the constitutionality of evacuation, will take part in the program, which is set for May 17. Currently, there are bills before Congress to establish a commission to study whether the civil rights of Japanese-Americans were violated and if so, what compensation should be made.

Seniors Attend MSU Classes This Summer

People over 60 can live on campus and attend a week of classes at Moorhead state university this summer through the Minnesota Elderhostel program.

Available at 20 Minnesota campuses, Elderhostel is a seven-day series of informal classes, cultural events and social programs for senior citizens and their spouses. They'll live in the campus dormitories along with other summer students during that week, take field trips, attend summer theatre and hold their own get-togethers.

People don't have to be college or even high school graduates or Minnesota residents to enroll. Age is the only requirement: over 60. Spouses may register together and both are eligible even if only one is over 60.

Elderhostel, inspired by the youth hostels and folk schools of Europe, is a national program that came to Minnesota three years ago. This summer over 700 senior citizens are expected to spend a week at Minnesota colleges and universities under the Elderhostel program.

At Moorhead state, Elderhostel is scheduled July 20-26 with the following classes.

"Identifying and Using Native Plants" explores the use of simple biological keys to identify native Minnesota plants. Indoor laboratories and local field trips to virgin prairie grasslands are part of the course. Students will have a chance to touch, examine and even taste some of these native plants and look into their past and present uses as food and medicine. Richard Pemble, a professor of biology at MSU, will teach this course.

"The Great Depression of the Thirties," taught by MSU president Dr. Roland Dille, will explore the life and politics of that decade on the 50th anniversary of the first summer of the depression. A special collection of materials from the 1930s will be available for discussions of the history, impact and memories of that period.

"Visions of the Future: The Humanities and Technology" will look into the 21st century through the eye of literature and the arts, anticipating the possible nightmares and utopian dreams of the future. Gary Litt, a professor of English at MSU, will teach the course.

Hostelers will arrive on campus on a Sunday, returning home the following Saturday morning. They may take one, two or all three courses. The classes will last one or two hours each day — some in the morning, some in the afternoon. There are no exams, no grades.

A centrally located dormitory on campus will be available for hostelers at Moorhead state. Most dormitory rooms are double occupancy without private baths. Private rooms will be available on request.

Costs for the week are $125 a person, including room, board and tuition. Some scholarships are available. And the Otto Bremer foundation has donated scholarship monies for people from Bremer bank communities who plan to attend Elderhostel. Those communities are: Alexandria, Brainerd, Brandon, Breckenridge, Crookston, Detroit Lakes, International Falls, Marshall, Redwood Falls, St. Cloud, Shelly, South St. Paul, Warren, Watertown and Willmar.

For further information about Elderhostel at Moorhead state, contact the university's continuing education division at (218) 236-2181.

Remove Solids From Septic Tank System

Solids should be removed from a septic tank by a qualified maintenance service that pumps out and carries away tank contents, according to University of Minnesota extension agricultural engineer Roger Machmeier.

"Septic tank additives that chemically flush solids defeat the purpose of the tank," Machmeier explains. "The solids are flushed into the drainfield where they plug soil pores."

Michael J. Hansel, Minnesota pollution control agency staff engineer, also requests homeowners to avoid chemical tank additives. "Certain degreasers are not broken down by the sewage system and will end up in the groundwater," he explains.

Two common tank degreasers, trichloroethane and methylene chloride, were once suspected cancer-causing agents. Recently completed research, however, shows that they are not carcinogenic. Hansel warns that they are still a problem: "Please do not add these or other haolgenated hydrocarbons to your home sewage system where they can find their way into, and contaminate, the groundwater."

A septic tank in a home sewage treatment system settles out sewage solids, Machmeier explains. Then, the bacteria active in the tank partially decompose the organic material. Proper septic tank care is to have a qualified septic tank maintenance service remove the solids by pumping.

For more information on home sewage systems, read Extension Folder 337 "Get to Know Your Septic Tank," available from your local extension office or the Bulletin Room, 3 Coffey Hall, University of Minnesota, St. Paul 55108.

PKU Victims Gain With Special Diet

by William Hoffman
"U" M News Service

Wisdom of the adage "you are what you eat" is probably lost on most people. But the parents of children with PKU cannot afford to ignore it. For those children, what they eat has a great deal to do with how smart they'll be.

Children suffering from the genetic disease called phenylketonuria, better known as PKU, were born without an important digestive enzyme. Without it, their bodies are unable to metabolize a common amino acid — phenylalanine — present in foods like meat, milk, cheese, bread and cake, in any food containing protein.

If the children are not placed on a severely restricted diet soon after birth, phenylalanine builds up in the blood and can damage the brain. From birth, children with PKU must subsist largely on a special powder mixed with water — or run the risk of deteriorating intelligence.

Whether to maintain or discontinue the diet after the child's brain has developed poses a medical dilemma for doctors. It was thought for a time that most children with PKU might be safely withdrawn from the diet at five or six, but recent research has unveiled some cases of pronounced drops in IQ among preteenagers who had begun to eat normally.

Administering the diet is inconvenient at best, especially after the children start school. Some parents take the risk of stopping the diet rather than endure the cheating and squabbling sometimes associated with enforcing it. Now and then a family is torn apart by the social and emotional burden of the disease.

Most states have laws requiring that newborn babies be tested for PKU. But not all infants who have PKU show high phenylalanine levels until some time afterward.

PKU is a rare disease. Only one out of every 10,000 to 15,000 infants born in the United States is affected. And unlike other chronic illnesses, PKU can be treated. Its victim can live a normal life span, if not a full life.

PKU clinic at University of Minnesota hospitals was established more than 20 years ago and has cared for 120 families. Clinic serves four states and provides diagnostic, dietary, and educational services to the patients and their parents. It is among the leading PKU research centers in the country.

"I suppose I could sell the PKU story as a medical success, but I don't think that would be appropriate," said Robert Fisch, professor of pediatric medicine and director of the clinic since 1961. "Medical treatment for the disease is improving all the time, but it is not a victory. The problems of treatment are enormously complicated."

PKU is not very old as diagnosed diseases go. First researcher to link high phenylalanine levels in the blood to mental retardation was a Norwegian doctor. That was in the early 1930s. Twenty years later a synthetic diet was developed, and in the early 1960s, a reliable and quick blood test for the disease that led to mass screening of infants was developed.

Diet formulas used by the clinic are Lofenalac and Nofenalac. Both contain essential nutrients but have little or no phenylalanine. Both are sold in the United States by Mead Johnson & Co.

Effectiveness of the diet is clear. "Of the children who don't get the dietary treatment, 80 per cent are severely retarded. Half never talk and a third never walk. It's very rare for a child with an untreated case of PKU to reach an IQ of 100 (the 95 to 105 range is considered normal), though some children who are treated early reach 90 and even over 100," Fisch said.

"The question is, is the diet good? I say no, not just because it is inconvenient but because it is not curing the disease," he said. "In fact, there is evidence that some damage has already been done during pregnancy — abnormal bone development or retardation, for instance."

Because there are variations in the disease, the diet for each victim must be adjusted accordingly. Lofenalac is "the principal source of protein and calories" for the children who are taking it, whereas those taking Nofenalac are allowed greater amounts of other foods, mainly fruits and vegetables.

Lofenalac is essentially an infant formula, Fisch said. As the children get older they require larger amounts of other foods. Nevertheless, the substance "is still the major source of food" for those on the diet.

Are children with PKU faced with the prospect of staying on the diet for a lifetime? Should teenagers have to subsist on an infant formula? "These are very complex and difficult questions," Fisch said. "In the past, when the mentally retarded were ordinarily put into institutions, PKU was an expensive, sad story. Today they are in an ordinary social and educational environment, no longer isolated.

"We must learn to look at the whole picture, not just the intelligence level of the child. There are social, emotional and growth considerations that must be taken into account. Sometimes stopping the diet is just a formality because the parents never enforced it," he said.

As difficult as the diet normally is to manage, perhaps the more serious concern to medical science is the prospect of women with PKU bearing children. Women with untreated cases of PKU almost certainly have a high risk of giving birth to infants with major birth defects, with small heads or malformed hearts. Whether those who have been treated have a lower risk is not yet known.

Fisch, along with pediatric psychologist Pi-Nian Chang provides genetic counseling as part of the PKU program. "My advice is that women with PKU shouldn't have children of their own," Fisch said. But some women with PKU do choose to have babies.

"We are seeing just the top of the problem of PKU right now," he said. "Our research is showing us that the disease is far more than just a biochemical disorder that can be managed by a special diet.

"The fact that we can control the serum concentration of phenylalanine does not mean we totally understand the disease," he said. "We have to be concerned not only with detecting and treating PKU but also with encouraging genetic counseling of prospective parents.

"Genetic counseling is available to those who listen," Fisch said. "Society is responsible for the genetic well-being of future generations."

Sharing The Burden

Additional comment on the proposal that a ban be placed on the weekend use of pleasure boats is contained in this editorial from the Lake Region Echo at Alexandria:

The recent good news that gasoline reserves are now at a level which virtually ensures no problem with long lines at the gas pumps this summer may hopefully weaken an argument that the Department of Energy is using to restrict weekend use of boats.

The bureaucrats are at work again trying to justify their existence by promulgating rules and regulations that would severly pinch the tourist industry in general and the lakes area in particular. The DOE's proposed Standby Energy Conservation Plan includes a request for the authority to restrict the weekend use of pleasure boats, either on Saturday or Sunday or both. The standy plan is supposed to be an "emergency" measure, although it has been indicated that the White House is considering declaring an emergency in the light of the situation in the Persian Gulf area.

Naturally, the National Marine Manufacturers Association. They point out that the boating industry is being singled out because of "high public visibility" and that they are "not interested in becoming DOE's symbolic scapegoat." We agree. Not only to the extent of the impact it would have on the boating manufacturers, but also the seriously negative effect the restriction would have on tourism and other related industries. The proposed regulation is unnecessary and discriminatory.

As pointed out by manufacturers, boating consumes little fuel, less than one-half of one percent of the annual U.S. oil consumption. The DOE has exempted other low fuel consumers from discriminatory restrictions. There are no such restrictions applied to general aviation, snowmobiling, recreational vehicles.

There are more than 541,000 boats registered in Minnesota and most of them have either been manufactured by the 44 boat manufacturers in this state or at least sold by one of the 548 marine dealers in Minnesota. Most boating occurs on weekends. The ban, according to manufacturers statistics, would effectively put 600,000 people in the recreational boating industry out of jobs.

As one local distributor pointed out, maybe the DOE should propose to cancel all major league baseball games this summer. The gas use on their cars to get to and from the games is far greater, he suspected, than what is used on weekend boating.

While it's the Department of Energy doing the proposing, we can once again direct the responsibility to the U.S. Congress. As the lawmakers did a few years back with OSHA (Occupational Health and Safety Act); in which they passed a nebulous law and gave the Labor Department authority to establish guidelines and enforce the same . . . our U.S. Senators and Representatives passed the Emergency Energy Conservation Act of 1979, which provided energy conservation and rationing programs in the event of both medium and severe energy shortages. Weekend boating restrictions was one of the ideas advanced by the non-elected, untouchable civil servants.

No one would argue that restrictions could be necessary. . . but a basic basic notion of fairness should be followed. . . that all should share the burdens of shortage on an equitable basis.

It Could Be Worse

Following editorial is from the Swift County Monitor:

There is a wave of pessimism sweeping the land with prophecies of economic disaster far from uncommon. Gradually, the word "depression" is entering conversations and articles replacing the much gentler term of "recession".

There is no question that we have comparatively tough economic times ahead if we are to control inflation. And, controlling inflation is essential to the future of this country and its citizens.

What's not going to help solve our problems is a feeling of incipient panic which seems to drift about. Israel, which has an horrendous inflation rate of 100 per cent per year, hasn't gone "belly-up" yet, though it can't continue much longer.

Americans are probably the most spoiled people on earth, wasting enormous amounts of energy and tax dollars, among other things. Now we have to impose a mild measure of discipline on our actions and appear as bewildered as a child put on a diet. If we would have taken individual responsibility to conserve we wouldn't need the government imposing restrictions now.

There have been many darker times in the history of this nation, not that our present economic situation isn't serious. However, we're not on the brink of anything and can, with some small sacrifices and faith in our system, lick inflation inside of two years.

Anderson In Wrong Party

Ever since we heard a little more about John Anderson and his bid for the Independent-Republican nomination for President of the United States, we wondered if the wire services and television networks hadn't mistakenly placed him in the wrong party. It didn't seem possible for him to hold the beliefs he expresses while hoisting a Republican banner.

The viewpoint is not an isolated one. Columnist Al Johnson in the Anoka Union had the following to say about Rep. Anderson's candidacy:

The greatest hoax being foisted on the public in the 1980 presidential contest if that Rep. John Anderson of Illinois has a chance to become the Republican nominee. The chance of such an occurence is considerably less than the chance of the proverbial snowball in hell.

There are more than a few reasons why Anderson has no prospect for success. The overriding reason, however, is that selection of the Republican candidate will ultimately be made by Republicans — not by liberal Democrats and Independents. He may be the Democrat's favorite Republican, but within his own party he is close to low man on the totem pole. In this regard it is interesting to note that only six of his fellow Republican congressmen, and none of their 41 senators, have endorsed his candidacy.

Why is Anderson's standing so low within his own party? The answer in abbreviated form would appear to be that those who know him best feel he is in the wrong party. Not just his stand on the issues, but his open support of some Democratic candidates for Congress has hopelessly alienated the vast majority of the GOP. It is this majority which will nominate its 1980 candidate.

There can be no question but that support for Anderson is largely a creation of the media. The Eastern liberal pundits have lavished him with praise — "intellectual", "integrity personified", "courageous", "best qualified" — you've heard the repetitive drumfire. Since the downfall of Ted Kennedy, John has become their hero.

Have you noticed how when Anderson opposes draft registration, while advocating the ERA, gun control, and "freedom of choice", those liberal pundits give him a standing ovation? They proclaim a candidate with the courage of his convictions — and intelligent convictions indeed. Yet another candidate may clearly state his views on the issues as directly oppostie to those of Anderson, only to find himself accused of generalizing or lacking political courage. Can you rationalize this double standard in reporting or editorializing?

At any rate Rep. Anderson faces a no-win situation. He is claiming the Wisconsin primary next Tuesday, April 1, will be the turning point in the campaign. He fails to mention, however, that he has already lost or missed so many primaries that he is close to mathematical elimination.

Suppose, nevertheless, the unlikely happens — that no candidate has the nomination locked-up by convention time. The nomination then becomes a matter of bargaining, second preferences and comprosmise. Remember Anderson would not now be dealing with Independents and Democrats, but with the party faithful. For the reasons mentioned above the likelihood of the convention turning to him is too remote to be given serious consideration.

What then keeps the man running? It could be an ego-trip — you have to suspect he's enjoying the national attention. It could also be a disguised shot at the vice presidential nomination. He would also appear to be headed for disappointment in this direction, but as the hackneyed phrase puts it, "politics makes for strange bedfellows." In this instance, however, any possible combination seems too strange to become a reality.

So if the prospect of John Anderson as president frightens you, relax; it's not about to happen.

Borrowed Nonsense:

"Well, Doc," said the patient after his physical exam, "how do I stand?"

"You know," the doctor replied, "that has me puzzled, too."

Energy Related Technology Is Grant Eligible

Northwest regional development commission has received information from the department of energy (DOE) of a support program for projects that will further the development of energy-related appropriate technology.

Eligible is technology that is small in scale and decentralized, utilizing local materials, labor and ingenuity, maximizes use of renewable resources and does not require a large financial investment.

Examples are biomass conversion, solar energy, wind energy, energy education, energy conservation, recycling, energy use in appliances, agriculture, buildings and transportation and other small-scale locally useful approaches. Objectives of the program are to achieve the following goals:

Meet the needs of local communities and enhance community self-reliance through the use of available resources; encourage use of renewable resources and conservation of non-renewable resources; apply existing technologies to novel situations and uses; encourage energy conserving, environmentally sound, small scale, and low cost applications; and encourage applications which demonstrate simplicity of installation, operation and maintenance.

Projects must be in one of three categories: (1) Idea Development — Grants up to $10,000 will be made for the development of ideas ranging from new sources of energy to the use of old procedures or systems for a new application;

(2) Device Development — Grants of up to $50,000 will be made for the development of a concept into the design, assembly, and laboratory-scale test of a system or technique in order to determine its technological feasibility and potential practical use;

(3) Project Demonstration — Grants of up to $50,000 will be made for applying a technological system or approach under real-life conditions to show that commercial application is technically, economically and environmentally feasible.

Applicants may be individuals, local non-profit organizations and institutions, state and local agencies and small businesses. Patent rights and confidentiality are protected.

Applicatuons are due in the Chicago office no later than April 23. Applications forms are quite simple and can be obtained though the regional commission office at 425 Woodland Avenue, Crookston, MN 56716, phone 281-1396.

Professor Pushes Dutch Language

by Paul Dienhart
'U' M News Service

It was not a typical student rally.

The signs carried slogans like: "Step Down to the Low Countries," "Get Your Kicks From Wooden Shoes" and "For Cheese's Sake, Take Dutch!"

But then, the University of Minnesota Dutch program is not a typical college language program. At a time when a President's commission is calling Americans' foreign language skills "scandalous," the Dutch program at the University of Minnesota is blooming like the tulips along the Zuider Zee.

There are close to 150 students taking Dutch this year. And a major in Dutch studies is being offered for the first time this year, one of two such programs in the nation. Only six American universities offer any Dutch courses at all.

Credit for much of the success of the Dutch program would seem to belong to its director, Ray Wakefield, who is not a typical professor. He not only teaches languages, he promotes them. How many language programs hold pep rallies?

Wakefield would prefer to credit the students. "When I was asked to teach a Dutch course back in 1971 I expected to get two or three students," Wakefield said. "The turnout was more like 30, and they obviously didn't come simply to satisfy a requirement. They were willing to work extra hours. It was fantastic."

When money for language courses got tighter, Wakefield volunteered to teach Dutch on top of a full teaching load of German. "The enthusiasm of the students made it impossible to walk away. I felt the program should continue its natural growth or decline, and not be nipped in the bud," Wakefield said.

He fuels the students' enthusiasm with some rather unconventional teaching methods. Wakefield — who has been known to walk around campus in an Erasmus of Rotterdam costume answering the questions of the curious — rented a house near campus for some of his Dutch students. Christened Netherlands House, it was the scene of a Happy Birthday Rotterdam party and a campus-wide smelt fry. Students who used the house had a chance to speak Dutch to one another. When a Dutch writer visited the campus he moved in for a week and cooked Dutch specialties for the tenants.

Netherlands House eventually became too big a financial burden for Wakefield, but he's found other original ways to teach.

Dutch students study grammar by computer, proceeding at their own pace. They meet with the teacher one or two at a time to get tutorial help. At least once every two weeks there's an evening gathering called a "borrelpraat" — Dutch for a "drink and a chat." Often, Dutch speakers living in the Twin Cities are invited to talk with the students. The borrelpraat is the closest thing to a regular class session.

The government of the Netherlands was so impressed with Minnesota's Dutch program that, since 1976, it's provided the salary for a visiting Dutch writer in residence.

The aim of Wakefield's teaching is to motivate students. "Languages are very tricky for adults to learn," he said. "Without a student's desire to learn, you're not going to get too far."

When he teaches intermediate German, he allows a couple weeks for a special project. One quarter it was German wine tasting.

The students read and talked about wines — in German. They looked at the geography of the wine-producing areas of Germany, and they tasted German wine. The project ended with a wine-tasting party, including a wine expert as special guest. He was shocked to discover that some of the students could identify more of the wines than he could.

"The wine project was, of course, optional," Wakefield said, "but none of the students refused."

He admits that his teaching methods won't work for everyone. "I have fun doing things that fit my rather theatrical nature. Those things wouldn't work for some teachers because students would spot them as phony. But there are hundreds of ways to motivate students that are consistent with a teacher's own personality."

THE TAX PICTURE

Who Pays The Most Income Taxes?

You may be surprised to learn how many of your closest friends and relatives are rich-according to the Treasury's definition!

The Robin Hood in you will probably rejoice to know that the rich pay the most taxes.

A U.S. Treasury study concludes that 70 percent of all personal income taxes in the country are paid by the richest one-fourth of the population. Does that sound fair to you?

You may change your mind when you learn that households in which the annual income exceeds $17,000 are considered "rich." While they earn 50 percent of the nation's income, they pay 70 percent of all personal taxes.

Financial planning is crucially important to most families, no matter how "rich" they are considered. The American Society of Chartered Life Underwriters, the national association of life insurance professionals, points out that the tax benefits offered by qualified retirement plans make them a sound investment for future security.

Can you manage to do well in this quiz about managing your money?

1. Many people are setting up Individual Retirement Accounts. Without adverse consequences, one can be transferred to another (a) always (b) within 60 days (c) never?

2. The Tax Reform Act of 1976 has caused life insurance to be (a) almost worthless (b) more valuable (c) unaffected?

4. The interest you pay on borrowing money or investments is tax deductible (a) some of the time (b) all the time (c) never?

ANSWERS: 1. (b) The assets of one Individual Retirement Account can be transferred to another without adverse tax consequences no later than 60 days after receiving distribution from the initial account. 2. (b) Life insurance appears to be even more valuable now because of its exemption from complex rules of the '76 Act that have created additional cash demands at death—cash needs that can best be met with adequate life insurance, experts say. 3. (c) According to the experts at the American Society of Chartered Life Underwriters, a person becomes 65, as far as the Internal Revenue Service is concerned, on the first minute of the day before his actual 65th birthday. 4. (a) Under the Tax Reform Act of 1976, the maximum deduction allowed for interest on investment indebtedness is $10,000 plus the individual taxpayer's net investment income; that is, interest, dividends, rents and royalties.

INFLATION-FIGHTING FOOD IDEAS

PAELLA SALAD

A cool idea for the cost-conscious food shopper with gourmet tastes is aromatic Paella Salad, made with nutritious, satisfying rice.

It takes its cue from Spanish paella, combining low-calorie rice with healthful seafood, chicken and green peas, seasoned in the traditional manner and best presented cold and garnished with red, fresh tomatoes.

PAELLA SALAD

1 package (6 ounces) frozen cooked, peeled, and deveined shrimp
3 cups cool cooked saffron rice*
1 can (8 ounces) minced clams, drained
1-1/2 cups diced cooked chicken
1-1/2 cups each sliced celery and cooked green peas
1/2 cup diced green pepper
1/3 cup sliced green onions with tops
1 cup mayonnaise
2 tablespoons dry white wine
3 tablespoons capers, optional
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon each garlic powder and pepper
2 medium fresh tomatoes, cut in wedges

Thaw and slice shrimp in half lengthwise. Combine with rice, clams, chicken, celery, green peas, green pepper, and onions. Blend mayonnaise with remaining ingredients except tomatoes. Pour over shrimp mixture and toss lightly. Chill. Use tomatoes for garnish or toss with salad before chilling. Makes 8-1/2 cups, or 6 to 8 servings.

* Cook rice according to package directions in chicken broth with a pinch of saffron, turmeric, or paprika.

Auction Service
USEFUL SUGGESTIONS FOR SUCCESSFUL AUCTIONS
A Big Crowd Means More Bidders and More Bidders Mean Better Prices For Your Property.

You Only Have One Chance
Bear in mind that all your goods are going to be sold in ONE DAY, and on that day depends whether you make or lose perhaps several hundred dollars. A few dollars' expense is absolutely nothing at all compared with the importance of advertising your Sale RIGHT.

You Cannot Take Chances Scrimping on Your Advertising
WE ARRANGE FOR ADVERTISING AUCTIONS.

GET READY BEFORE SALE DAY
The importance of getting ready before sale day cannot be emphasized too much. Do this before sale day.

Helpful Sale Suggestions:
YOUR CATTLE
Should be carefully groomed. Number or tag every head. Have breeding and registry information on hand.
HOGS AND SHEEP
Should be graded if of different classes, not too many in a pen. All their surroundings clean and neat. Advertise average weights when practical.
FARM EQUIPMENT
Should all be clean, in good repair, and so arranged that each piece can be seen by the bidders and the auctioneer can see his audience at all times.
LAND
Give complete legal description of land and buildings. Be exact when describing terms.
HOUSEHOLD GOODS
Should be clean, in good condition and neatly arranged.
GRAIN AND FEED
Be accurate as to quantities for sale.
MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES
Should not be left in the corners of the yard, barn or house, or under piles of rubbish. If they are worth selling at all, clean them up, get them ready and get every cent possible out of them.
DO JUST AS YOU ADVERTISE
Nothing can be more important. A suspicion of side-bidding will kill a sale, no matter how big the crowd. Make it an open sale and take your chances. If you want to advertise everything sold "as is," let us know.
BE SURE AND HAVE A LUNCH
Some auctioneers refuse to cry a sale without it. A full stomach makes a good bidder. Don't omit the hot coffee.
THE AUCTIONEERS
Get good auctioneers — the best to be had — those who are honest and reliable and whose statements can be relied upon. They must be men familiar with everything you may have to sell and be able to see and explain good points to bidders. Many reliable auctioneers are available in our area.

Reasons Why Our Bank Should Clerk Your Sale:
1. We guarantee collection of receivables.
2. We can arrange for the auctioneer(s) and reserve the sale date.
3. We can arrange all advertising and settle with advertisers.
4. We make prompt settlement with records in duplicate for income tax use.
5. We offer low cost service which means MORE CASH for you!
6. We mail auction bills to over 200 banks and businesses in the area.

THE VOICE of BUSINESS

by Richard L. Lesher, President
U.S. Chamber of Commerce

Do We Help Consumers By Destroying Business?

After all the Administration's rhetoric about its new crisis budget of pain, here are two facts you should know: First, thanks to some very clever juggling of numbers, the actual net reduction in proposed federal spending for fiscal 1980 and 1981 will be — hold your breath — ZERO. Surprise! As the Wall Street Journal explained, " . . . In releasing its new spending totals the White House also made (upward) 'revisions' to the spending estimates it offered back in January. The March figures are the January figures, plus 'revisions' minus 'cuts'."

Second, the increase in tax revenues from one fiscal year through the next will jump by an unprecedented $92 billion — the worst tax increase in peacetime history. In fact, this projected $92 billion increase is so huge, it equals all the money the federal government collected in total tax receipts just 20 years ago. So while the budget "cuts" are a joke, and on us, of course, most of the pain the President promised is real, but will fall on the backs of taxpayers.

More and more Americans see April 15th, the deadline for mailing tax returns, as a national day of shame, even disgrace. But one group definitely does not. Led by Ralph (I'll decide what's best for consumers) Nader, these individuals won't be joining the protests for lower taxation, less spending and reduced regulation. Their hearts and minds are engaged elsewhere, planning an anti-business day for April 17th, to convince America the business community should be blamed for every national ill from chronic inflation to ring around the collar and sore feet. Just take a glimpse at their all-star cast.

Mr. Nader himself, of course, is top dog. And with his vision, why not? Among Ralph's pearls: " . . . compared to China, we can't get anything done . . . " and, "I'll tell you what the real problem is. We ask people to think instead of asking them to believe. And history has always gone to those who believe."

For economic expertise, the group can look to John Kenneth Galbraith, who once said any New York City problem could be solved by simply providing more money. Backing up John will be economist Robert Lekachman, a strong supporter of George McGovern in 1972 when the candidate proposed giving away $1,000 to any deserving American.

But for real intellectual clout, the anti-business coalition can turn to their clean-up hitter, labor leader William Wimpisinger. "Wimpy" says: "I am convinced the only way organized labor can repeal the armies of right-wing radicalism is by fighting for a total redistribution of this nation's income and wealth . . . by completely revamping and reorganizing the total tax system." Who are these right wing radicals?

Ralph and his gang will shriek to any camera in sight that big business monopolizes markets, exploits workers, gobbles up profits, pollutes the atmosphere and poisons the political process. Anyone honestly willing to look beyond this hysterically dreary litany might want to consider a few facts:

Since 1975, the private enterprise system has created an average of 2.5 million jobs every year and still produces the greatest variety of products and services of any society in the world. Wages paid to workers in the 200 largest manufacturing firms average about 37 per cent higher than for all the rest of manufacturing. As a percentage of total national income, corporate profits have actually declined from 12 per cent in 1963 to nine per cent last year. In contrast, the earnings of employees during the same period increased from 69 per cent of national income to 73 per cent. What's more, the biggest stockholders in America are pension funds, mutual funds, insurance companies and trust funds who invest the direct and indirect earnings of — working people. Workers justifiably complain that their higher take home pay buys less. They should also understand why: During the last ten years, federal taxes have increased 61 per cent faster than prices, 67 per cent faster than wages and 154 per cent faster than profits. Look who's been taking money from whom!

Far from destroying the environment, business spent $124 billion between 1970-77 to protect and purify our air and water — by far the greatest commitment of any country in the world. Nor is it enough to say progress has been made, for the number of government-cited violations has dropped dramatically across the board.

Finally, in the 1978 elections, corporate Political Action Committees (PACs), gave only about four per cent of all campaign contributions; the largest corporate PAC spent less than one-fifth as much as the largest union PAC, which just happens to be headed by Douglas Fraser — a sponsor of Ralph Nader's Anti-Business Day!

Maybe it's time we all ask what makes Ralph Nader tick — his love for the consumer or his hatred of business?

A Look At The Soviet Grain Embargo

Congress has declared that a sound agricultural sector requires a minimization of restrictions on exports of agricultural commodities and products. However, it has cited three situations in which export controls on commodities can be applied: Reasons of national security, foreign policy and short supply.

Responding to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and citing reasons of national security and foreign policy, President Carter directed on January 4, 1980, that United States shipment of wheat and corn to the Soviet Union be limited to eight million tons during the 12-month period ending September 30, 1980. The President also directed that exports of other agricultural commodities to the Soviet Union be suspended.

What has been the impact of his decision? Let me share some information with you provided to me by Clarence Palmby, former assistant secretary of agriculture for international affairs under President — Nixon, — and currently vice president of public affairs for the Continental Grain Company.

I should note that under the terms of a five-year bilateral agreement between the United States and the USSR, we are committed to ship eight million tons of wheat and corn to the Soviets each year. Additional amounts can be shipped after consultations between the two governments. As of January 4, the date of the President's announcement, about five million tons had been shipped, and we had authorized the Soviets to purchase up to 25 million tons of corn and wheat for shipment during the current 12-month period.

That said, let's look at the effectiveness of the embargo. First, no other grain exporting country has agreed to embargo grain exports to the Soviet Union. Some major exporting nations have agreed to not increase their exports to that destination. Other major exporting countries have announced that price will determine the destination of their grain and oilseed exports.

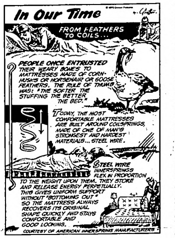
Second, according to official and private estimates, the Soviets will import from other origins about 50 per cent of the grain not already shipped from the United States. This availability of other grain will coincide with their shortrun seasonal requirements, and will go far in filling the gap prior to their own new crop harvest. Also the United States will increase its exports of grain to other destinations and it will be difficult to prevent those countries from then shipping our grain to the Soviets.

Third, the Soviets will likely increase their importation of soybean meal and soybeans as a supplement to grain for livestock rations, thereby improving feeding efficiencies for their livestock and further minimizing the impact of the embargo.

One way to verify these developments is to monitor prices. For example, following the President's decision to embargo exports, a two-tier world market price has developed for corn: One, the United States price which has traditionally been the world price; and two, a higher price for corn of other origins eligible for destination to the Soviet Union. This means that an additional volume of world grain is now being traded in the world market isolated from the United States price system, which has traditionally functioned as a global system.

The Administration estimates the cost to taxpayers of the grain embargo could run as high as $3 billion. That is what the government will have to pay to keep domestic prices from dropping lower than they were before the embargo. Other estimates predict the costs will be much higher than $3 billion. Thus, one must at least question the effectiveness of a decision that, to date, has resulted in lost markets for farmers, higher costs to taxpayers, but apparently little, if any, reduction in the total quantity of grain arriving in the USSR.

Trade relationships offer great possibilities for long term cooperation. They are not easy to establish and maintain, hence they should not be turned on and off to suit current political whim. But it's even worse to penalize the American farmer, and the American taxpayer while accomplishing so little with the Soviets.



In Our Time
FROM FEATHERS TO COILS...
PEOPLE ONCE ENTRUSTED THEIR WEARY BONES TO MATTRESSES MADE OF CORN-HUSKS OR HORSEHAIR OR GOOSE FEATHERS. THE RULE OF THUMB WAS: "THE SOFTER THE STUFFING THE BETTER THE BED."
TODAY, THE MOST COMFORTABLE MATTRESSES ARE BUILT AROUND COILS MADE OF ONE OF MAN'S STRONGEST AND HARDEST MATERIALS... STEEL WIRE.
STEEL WIRE INNERSPRINGS FLEX IN PROPORTION TO THE WEIGHT UPON THEM. THEY STORE AND RELEASE ENERGY PERPETUALLY. THIS GIVES UNIFORM SUPPORT WITHOUT "BOTTOMING OUT" SO THE MATTRESS ALWAYS RECOVERS ITS ORIGINAL SHAPE QUICKLY AND STAYS COMFORTABLE AND GOOD LOOKING.

Per Capita Tax Burden In MN. Passes $1,000

Minnesota's per capita state and local tax burden inched over the $1,000 level in 1978 for the first time in history, according to the Minnesota Taxpayers association.

The per person or per capita burden was $1,001.38 in 1978, retaining the state as the ninth highest in the nation. Minnesota also retained its position as the highest taxed state in the Midwest. Neighboring Wisconsin had the second highest burden in the Midwest, according to the data, with $970 per capita placing the state 12th highest in the nation.

Minnesota's state and local tax burden represents a 10.5 per cent increase over the $906.10 reported in 1977. The average increase witnessed in the rest of the nation was 9.2 per cent. The U.S. average state and local burden was $888 per capita in 1978.

The state-by-state tax burden figures, based on U.S. department of commerce data, are included in a brochure which will be sent to the MTA's members this week. The brochure breaks down the tax burden according to type of tax, both on per capita basis and per $1,000 of personal income and includes data on total state and local expenditures.

In specific areas of taxation, Minnesota's ranking remained the same in both individual income taxes and property taxes. The state's $268.10 per capita individual income tax burden was fifth highest in the nation. This compares with a national burden of $152.99 per capita. Based on income tax revenues per $1,000 of personal income, Minnesota ranked highest with $37.92. The U.S. average was $21.91.

Minnesota ranked 23rd highest in per capita property tax collections with $300.85. This is slightly below the U.S. average of $304.60. According to Don Paterick, executive director of the association, "It is unfortunate that there is such a lag in comparative state data. Property taxes as reported by the U.S. department of commerce are based on fiscal 1978 collections which means that not even all of the 1977 legislative session enactments pertaining to property tax relief are reflected in the data.

"Due to subsequent relief passed by the 1979 session, I would expect to see Minnesota's ranking in property taxes drop in forthcoming years. Substantiating that statement is the fact that net property taxes in Minnesota have risen a total of only 9.8 per cent in 1978 and 1979. It should also be emphasized that Minnesota's 'circuit breaker' payments are not reflected in the data. This state-paid relief amounted to $195 million in 1978."

Minnesota's 14 per cent per capita increase in sales tax collections moved the state up one ranking in 1978, to 37th highest. The state's $134.10 per capita compares with a national average of $166.18.

Corporate income tax collections rose 12.5 per cent on a per capita basis. Minnesota's $73.07 in per capita collections places the state fifth highest in the nation. The U.S. average is $53.82.

Per capita spending by the state and local governments in Minnesota showed a six per cent rise, reaching $1,546 per person in 1978. This places the state ninth highest in spending, and $191 per capita above the national average. Expenditures for education account for 37 per cent of the total or $578 per capita. Minnesota ranks 14th highest in spending for total education, and eighth highest in the nation in expenditures for local schools. The latter expenditures are 15 per cent above the national average.

Public welfare is the second largest expenditure item with $222 per capita. This is 28 per cent above the U.S. average, and ninth highest in the nation. Expenditure for highways was third highest with $165.39 per capita. This is 13th highest in the nation and 47 per cent above the national average per capita. Expenditure areas where Minnesota ranked below the national average were veterans services, airports, police and fire and public building.

Quie Reviews Procedure For Citizen Action

"The people of Minnesota should have the rights of initiative and referendum," states Gov. Al Quie.

"As early as 1978, during my campaign for governor, I proposed that the Minnesota Constitution be amended to allow Minnesota residents these privileges. In fact, my first campaign position paper was on this issue.

"This year, as governor, I am asking the Legislature to place the initiative and referendum constitutional question on the 1980 ballot," he said. "The people of this state have indicated they want a larger voice in state government. Initiative and referendum would give them that opportunity."

Initiative is the process by which citizens, through petition, may propose legislation to the voters. Similarly, referendum is the process by which citizens may, by petition, propose that an existing law be repealed.

Here's how they would work. Any citizen wishing to propose an initiative or referendum would form a sponsoring committee of at least 25 persons and file a declaration and $200 fee with the secretary of state's office. The secretary would advise the sponsors to consult with the revisor of statutes about proper and legal wording of the proposal. After the actual petition form is approved by the secretary, sponsors would be able to collect signatures.

To put an initiative on the ballot, sponsors would have to acquire signatures equal to 10 per cent of the number of votes cast for all candidates in the last gubernatorial election. Using the 1978 election figures, approximately 158,000 signatures would be required. Of that number, each county would have to be represented by signatures equal to eight per cent of the vote in the last gubernatorial election in that county. This would assure that issues would have statewide support — not just regional — before they would be placed on the ballot.

To place a referendum on the ballot, signatures equal to five per cent of the votes cast in the last gubernatorial election would be required. Using 1978 figures, approximately 79,000 signatures would need to be gathered. Of that figure each county would have to be represented by signatures equal to four per cent of the votes cast in the last gubernatorial election in that county.

For an initiative to become law or a referendum to repeal a law, the measures must be approved by a majority of those voting on the question in the general election.

"In developing my initiative and referendum proposal," Gov. Quie said, "I studied provisions from 26 other states that have some form of initiative or referendum. I incorporated the best elements of these measures in what I believe to be a good, workable plan.

"In offering this constitutional amendment I believe I am expressing the wishes of the people. A 1978 Minnesota poll reported that 75 per cent of those questioned support initiative and 79 per cent support referendum. Since that poll was taken I feel that support for these measures has increased.

"Furthermore, this constitutional amendment proposal has bipartisan support. Independent Republican Rep. Paul Thiede of Pequot Lakes is the chief author of the bill in the House and DFL Sen. Florian Chmielewski of Sturgeon Lake is carrying the bill in the senate," the governor said.

"I believe the people of this state want initiative and referendum. And I am hoping that the 1980 legislature will provide Minnesotans with the opportunity to vote on this matter in the 1980 general election."

ENERGY SAVING TIPS

FROM THE FRIEND OF THE FAMILY

Small is Often Better When Cooking

When used correctly, small kitchen appliances can save energy in meal preparation. For example, toasting bread in the oven requires three times as much energy as a pop-up toaster.

Other small appliances that can save energy include electric grills and skillets, bean and crock pots, electric coffee pots, bottle warmers and counter-top ovens.

Many table top appliances, like electric skillets, bun warmers and bean pots, are designed to be used as a serving dish, too. This means a double energy savings because the number of dishes to be washed will be reduced, decreasing the use of hot water energy.

For best operating efficiency of small appliances, keep them out of drafts when in use. Drafts can steal cooking heat, which wastes energy.

Keep appliances in good operating condition and make sure you follow manufacturer's instructions on proper usage and maintenance.

For energy saving and safety's sake, be sure to turn appliances off as soon as you finish with them.

Energy...here to serve you today and tomorrow. Use it wisely.

These energy saving tips are brought to you as a public service by the Natural Gas Council of Minnesota.

Wildlife Group Is Fighting Timber Co.

Accusing the nation's second largest timber company of "abusive forestry practices," the National Wildlife Federation, the nation's largest citizens conservation organization, has filed two shareholder proposals to be presented at the Weyerhaeuser company's April 17 annual meeting in Tacoma, Washington.

The proposals would require Weyerhaeuser to adopt specific guidelines to "govern forestry activities impacting wildlife and wildlife habitat" on its approximately 900,000-acre holdings in southeastern Oklahoma and to establish a "formal, written company policy on wildlife and wildlife habitat."

According to NWF attorney Peter Kirby, the federation learned about Weyerhaeuser's operations in southeastern Oklahoma from the Oklahoma Wildlife Federation, an NWF affiliate. The Oklahoma conservation group, along with other state and local organizations, was deeply concerned that the Weyerhaeuser method of clearcutting extensive areas of the existing mixed pine and hardwood forest followed by replanting with pure pine was resulting in the loss of hardwood habitat vital for wild turkey, raccoon, squirrel and other wildlife.

In addition, Kirby said, they noted that streams which only a few years ago ran clear were now clouded with silt eroded from logging roads and clearcut areas. This, they complained, was ruining much of Oklahoma's smallmouth bass population.

Recently, Kirby toured Weyerhaeuser's Oklahoma holdings and saw "concrete evidence of mismanagement and abusive forestry techniques." Cut trees had been dragged along and across streams, bringing with them soil and debris from the forest floor, and hardwood stands along streams and rivers were being injected with poison and destroyed, Kirby said.

"Weyerhaeuser owns about 900,000 acres of land in southeast Oklahoma — that's an area larger than Rhode Island — and has already cut over and converted more than a quarter of its holdings to an even-aged pine plantation," Kirby explained. "At the current clearcutting rate of 35,000 acres a year, the entire area may be converted by 1997, except for flooded or very steep areas."

"Unless the company makes plans now to identify and save important hardwood areas, particularly along streams and rivers, there will be a radical change in the area's wildlife," he continued. "Without the nuts and acorns, as well as the shelter that hardwood trees provide, there will be major reductions in deer, squirrel and wild turkey populations. Moreover, the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker, which nests only in infected mature pine trees — which are customarily destroyed by Weyerhaeuser — may disappear entirely."

"And," he concluded, "just as the state and local conservationists fear, clogged and muddled streams could mean the end of the area's smallmouth bass."

NWF's proposed guidelines are designed to prevent such drastic changes and are patterned after practices used by other large profit-making timber companies. NWF asks Weyerhaeuser to:

+Retain a number of standing, dead trees for cavity nesters and dwellers, and nut-bearing trees for wildlife food.

+Reduce erosion from logging roads.

+Allow for strips of hardwood trees along major streams and primary roads to protect scenic values and water quality.

+Limit clearcut areas to under 300 acres and irregularly shape them to provide greater "edge" for wildlife.

The federation's second proposal asks Weyerhaeuser to establish a formal wildlife policy that would require coordination with state fish and game agencies, local conservationists, sportsmen and recreation groups.

In its written responses to the NWF proposals, the management recommends that its shareholders vote against both proposals, explaining that there are already corporate policies and guidelines in effect which address NWF's concerns. These include a "Sensitive Area Management program," a "Corporate Environmental Policy," "Timberlands Environmental Guidelines" and a "specific Wildlife Management Policy," adopted in 1979.

Kirby questioned how well these policies addressed wildlife concerns. "The two-page 'Corporate Environmental Policy' never even mentions the word, 'wildlife'," he noted. The one-page "Wildlife Management Policy" says that the company's policy of protecting wildlife is "within the frame of the company's forest objectives." According to Kirby, that statement indicates that wildlife needs will be provided "only so long as they don't interfere with timber protection."

During long hours of discussion and negotiations with Weyerhauser officials, Kirby pointed out, the other documents were never mentioned at all, either to him or the local and state conservationists.

"We must wonder how adequate all these policies and guidelines are in the light of continuing abuses," Kirby emphasized. "But we do hope that real action will come soon in the form of new guidelines and a management plan which Weyerhaeuser is now developing for the Oklahoma region. While we hope these plans will resolve our problems, we felt filing these shareholder proposals was our best course of action. If management won't act responsibly, perhaps the shareholders will."

NWF was able to place the two proposals before Weyerhaeuser's shareholders as the owner of 1,800 shares of Weyerhaeuser common stock — a part of its endowment fund.

Sigrid Griebstein Still Young At 99

by Bonnie Reed
Times Reporter

Sigrid Griebstein remembers homesteading with her family near Thief River Falls in 1904. She remembers Germantown — the stopping place for homesteaders which was located between Thief River Falls and Grygla. Mrs. Griebstein is only a year away from becoming a centenarian.

"We went through some tough times," she admitted, shaking her head slowly. "We went from place to place trying to find some land to farm on."

Germantown had a store and a post office. And all letters were mailed at that post office, she recalled — which was four miles away from her family's home. Homes built during that time began as one-room dwellings with additions constructed later.

Sigrid, who was born in Sweden, came to the United States when she was 20, she said.

"We had to go somewhere to settle, so we came to the United States," she added.

Everything was hard in "those" days, according to Sigrid, who has been a resident of the Valley Home nursing home in Thief River Falls for the past three years. Forest fires were one of the worst tragedies during that time, especially since there were no ditches to control the fires once they started. And everyone helped in the fire-fighting. Furrows had to be dug to prevent the fires from spreading to the homes. "I was a fire fighter too," she said.

A doctor was situated halfway between her home and Thief River Falls. She remembers her family staying in town overnight many times because the trip made with carts, horses and oxen was too long to make in one day. The family's team of horses died the first winter they had them because of the raw weather, she said.

Sigrid remembers taking her baby buggy out in the fields with her while she worked. "We did just about everything ourselves," she said.

Milking cows was a twice a day chore. And, although most people had large gardens to grow most of their own foods,

SIGRID GRIEBSTEIN, who celebrated her 99th birthday on Good Friday, believes that many things have changed since the days when she and her family first settled near Thief River Falls in 1904. "I have lived through it all," she said, during a recent Times interview.

Open House At AVTI Tuesday

Open house at the Thief River Falls area vocational technical institute will be held Tuesday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., according to Arnt Aune, director of the school. A Northern Minnesota Shoppers Guide advertisement listing the date as Wednesday, April 9, was incorrect, Aune said.

The AVTI is holding the open house to show the public its newly enlarged and remodeled facilities on highway 1 east of the city. Group tours will be provided as visitors assemble in the lobby area during the day.

For those interested in participating, the regular noon lunch will be served in the combined AVTI-Northland community college food service building for $1.50. Free registration will also be held in several departments for prizes to be awarded following the open house.

Prizes offered include a tool chest from the carpentry department, diagnostic check and tune-up (less parts) from the auto mechanics department, trailer hitch from the welding department, shampoo set, manicure or permanent from the cosmetology department and an automobile front end alignment (less parts) from the auto body department.

No Filing Yet For Office On School Board

No filings for the Thief River Falls board of education had been received by the school district clerk or superintendent's office as of this morning, according to school officials. Filing for the office opened on Saturday.

Board members whose terms expire this year are Maynard Wedul, nearly 12 years of board service; Robert Sorvig and Larry McDowell, each with six years of board service.

McDowell, current chairman of the board, has announced his intention to file for reelection. Wedul has decided not to be a candidate, and Sorvig was undecided when contacted by the Times late last week. Board members are elected for three-year terms.

Filing for school board office will remain open until Tuesday, April 29, with the election to be held Tuesday, May 20 and terms of office to take effect July 1.

Three Charged With Theft At Kmart Store

One juvenile and three adult employees of the Kmart store in Thief River Falls have been charged with theft as a result of merchandise being taken from the store.

Thief River Falls police reported that at 11:51 p.m. last Monday they received a call from Ken Meyer, manager of the store, that he had three people in custody who had been stealing from the store. Store personnel apprehended were Theresa J. Drury, 21; Shirley A. Brandt, 30; and Fern J. Langevin, 22, all of Thief River Falls, and a 17-year-old juvenile whose name was not released.

According to police, the employees are believed to have been taking merchandise from the store by placing it in trash bags, then returning to retrieve the bags from the trash container outside the store. Store management had been alerted to the scheme and placed the trash receptacle under observation. The three adults were caught as they were taking items from the trash container late last Monday night.

Recovered items included a camera, electrical equipment and clothing with a total value of $570.02, police said. Investigation of the case is continuing by the police department.

Our Energy of the Future

CHILDREN FROM THREE of the pre-school programs in Thief River Falls gathered around Mayor Bob Carlson Thursday morning at the Northwest regional library in honor of national week of the young child observed April 6-12 under the theme of "Children — The Energy of the Future." Pictured with the Mayor, who also signed the proclamation for the special week, are (left to right) Jeremy Craig, son of James Craig, and Karla Froschheiser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ken Froschheiser, who both attend Discovery Place; Amy Sisler, daughter of Mrs. Nancy Vigness and David Sisler, who attends the pre-school program at Mark Twain; and Lisa Boutain, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rick Boutain, who attends the Falls day activity center.

School Dist. Must Vacate Section Of Lincoln Bldg.

Following receipt of orders from the state fire marshal's office, the Thief River Falls board of education took steps last week to vacate the basement of the 1910 section of Lincoln high school, install smoke alarms, construct fire door barriers, patrol the second floor area and make plans to vacate the second floor area at the end of this school year.

The board also received information regarding the selection of Richard Miller as arbitrator to succeed John W. Boyer in the matter of contract settlement with the school district's faculty. The board and local MEA affiliate agreed to allow their representatives in negotiations to make the selection in order to reduce the time required. It appears now that the April 18 hearing date originally set for arbitration may be viable.

While the board discussed direction to be taken after this school year with the loss of classroom space in the 1910 section of Lincoln, no definite action was taken. A number of alternatives were presented by school administration, including reorganizing grades in buildings, using staggered scheduling at Lincoln, constructing temporary classroom units, using rental facilities outside of school buildings, or utilizing space which may be available in other districts or local post-high school buildings.

The letter directing the board to close the Lincoln section in question came from Wally Collins, assistant division director for the fire marshal's office, following a meeting of the state fire marshal code advisory panel. Addressed to Supt. Corliss, the letter is as follows:

Dear Dr. Corliss:

The State Fire Marshal Code Advisory Panel (FMCAP) has met and has arrived at a decision regarding the 1910 portion of the above named educational facility.

Final decision was delayed, as you are aware, so that a fact-finding inspection of the affected building could be conducted by members of the FMCAP in company with Mr. Pat Barry, State Fire - Arson Investigator, and school district officials. A panel meeting this date reviewed the results of the inspection as well as alternatives available. After considerable panel involvement, consensus as follows:

Due to the dilapidated and poorly maintained structure, which includes, overaccumulations of combustible storage, inadequate and poorly maintained exiting from basement areas, combustible wall paneling in the central corridor leading to exits from the main floor, as well as having the knowledge that structural deficiencies have previously led to permanent evacuation of some top floor areas, the Panel goes on record as follows:

1. Within seven (7) days, on receipt of this letter:

a. The top floor, which you have assured us is already vacated from classroom activities, must be sealed off from all further use by installation of a permanent barrier at the base of the stairway to top floor. All electrical wiring should be disconnected to the top floor. All storage should also be removed from this area.

b. The entire basement, including gymnasium, storerooms, classrooms and retail store, must be vacated permanently with the installation of a permanent barrier at the top of the steps to the basement.

2. If the School District complies with all portions of Item 1, the Panel will authorize the use of the main floor for classroom activities until the end of the current school year, with the following restrictions imposed:

a. A qualified staff person will provide a constant monitoring of the entire central corridor during all building occupied hours; and

b. Approved battery operated smoke detectors shall be installed 30' on center of corridor ceiling; and

c. All storage shall be removed and kept from the central corridor; and

d. No smoking requirements shall be rigidly enforced.

This letter is somewhat of a departure from our normal method of operation which includes the issuance of written orders for violations of codes and statutes. However, the unique and obvious hazards to life from possible fire occurance within the 1910 portion of the school, as well as previous orders issued without compliance, dictate an alternate in this instance. Therefore, the Code Advisory Panel must go on record as not approving further usage of the 1910 structure beyond the current school year without major renovation which would require strict adherence to the requirements of the State Building Code.

In the event the School District wishes to pursue a request for variance from the decision of the Panel, initial effort will be required to be directed to the Thief River Falls City Council under Minnesota Statute 299F.011, subdivision 5. Any resolution favoring or denying such

The Joyce And Todd Phelps Story:

Sugar And Spice On Ice — That's Nice!

by Marvin Lundin
Times Editor

Four years ago when Joyce Phelps collided with another skater on a crowded Bemidji ice rink and sustained a deep laceration in her lower leg, the doctor told her she shouldn't expect to get much use out of the leg again. Certainly, he said, she likely would skate no more.

Today, thanks to what her mother calls "the power of prayer and a modern surgical miracle", she skates five hours a day and finds the leg responding to the exercise as feeling returns and strength is gained.

It was medical skill which patched up the sliced nerves and tendons, but it was perseverance, determination, grit and guts that put Joyce back on the ice and is causing her not only to perform but to excel at the sport she loves. And it is sacrifice by her parents that enables her to pursue that sport in the manner that only few are privileged to do. Furthermore, Joyce recognizes that sacrifice.

Joyce is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Phelps of Thief River Falls. She became interested in figure skating at age 11 through the recreational skating program at the local sports arena. It was in preparation for a local ice show that she had gone to Bemidji with others and the accident mentioned above happened.

Linda Worth, a prime mover in forming the local skating association and later an instructor in it, had taken the skaters to Bemidji. It was she who held the deeply cut calf of Joyce's leg in her hands to keep it together during the ride to the hospital. And it was she who gave Joyce and her family the encouragement which got Joyce back on the ice and stimulated her desire to develop her skating abilities.

Linda also suggested in 1978 that the Phelps arrange for Joyce and her little brother Todd — scarcely eight years old at the time — to go to Colorado Springs, Colo., and take some lessons during the summer months. The Phelps took the advice, living in a furnished apartment while Joyce and Todd spent most of the summer skating and learning. Then it was back to Thief River Falls for school.

Like in any athletic endeavor, however, constant participation is essential to development. Although benefitting from the summer of instruction, Joyce and Todd found that the lack of ice until late into the fall caused them to fall behind the skill level they had attained during the summer. The situation was frustrating to them.

In the summer of 1979, the Phelps returned again to Colorado for another summer session. They purchased a town house with the idea of renting it out during the time they would be living back home. Joyce and Todd made

IT WAS FAMILY TIME when Joe and Rita Phelps brought Joyce and Todd into the Fountain of Jewels during a recent trip to Thief River Falls. They explained to Elaine Loberg, store owner, the engraving they needed done so the skating medals won the youngsters would be marked for future identification. Joe and Rita have sacrificed some family togetherness so that their youngest two children can have the advantage of year-around skating practice and instruction in Colorado Springs, Colo. Joe retains his real estate business in Thief River Falls.

GETTING SOME PRACTICE time in during a recent visit to Thief River Falls were Joyce and Todd Phelps, children of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Phelps of Thief River Falls. Both youngsters are skating year-around in the Colorado Springs area, attending schools which cater to skaters. They have lessons and practice time nearly every day and are now preparing for competitive events. It was the Thief River Falls recreational skating program that stimulated their interest in figure skating and they received their initial instruction here. Todd is scribing a circle to be used in tracing for school figures.

Mrs. Kraemer explained the operations of the prayer chain and stated that anyone can use and-or be a part of this group being organized by her, Mrs. James LaCoursiere and Mrs. Lynn Egenes. She said that when a family emergency arises, such as an accident, illness or a family problem, or when an individual feels the need of prayer support, the key members of the group will notify other members, and in chain reaction, will offer prayers or give the needed support. Following her presentation, the Catholic Daughters offered to support the prayer group by signing their names.

The meeting adjourned with Sister Placid leading the prayers, "Hail Holy Queen," "Hail Mary," for the success of the prayer chain, and an invocation to the Mother of God for Christians. Sponsor I.D. Bracelet Plan

Lost child? Injured adult? Diabetic or allergic? Planning a camping trip? These are only a few of the many reasons supporting a visible means of identification, according to the Thief River Falls Jaycee Women. A small child may not know his name and address and an injured adult or ill person of any age may also be unable to furnish such information.

Civil defense and public safety officials recommend that everyone wear a permanent type identification on the wrist, upon which has been included such information as name, street address, city, state, telephone number, birthdate and medical information.

Local Jaycee Women are sponsoring this program of identification and medical information bracelets. The bracelets, which may be ordered, are made of stainless steel and have the desired information permanently stamped on them. Cost per bracelet is $2.50.

Plain paper may be used to place orders for bracelets for your children, relatives or friends. A self-addressed, stamped envelope should also be enclosed with the order and be mailed to: Vital Products, Box 111, Audubon, MN 56511.

Seek Craftsmen To Exhibit At Itasca Park

Up North Handcrafts is now seeking Minnesota artists and craftspeople who would like to exhibit their works or demonstrate their skills this summer at Brower Inn in Minnesota's Itasca state park.

Brower Inn program of exhibits and demonstrations is now in its sixth year. Begun in 1975 as a joint effort of Up North Handcrafts, an independent, nonprofit business working with craftspeople in Minnesota, and the Minnesota department of natural resources and other sponsoring agencies, the program provides unique exposure for area artists and craftspeople.

Program has three parts. These include the Brower gallery, the craft interpretive program, and a retail shop which sells Minnesota hancrafts.

Brower gallery this year will feature a series of shows of works by regional artists. Painting, handmade furniture, photography, quilts, pottery and other high quality works in all fine art and craft media are being sought. The works will be for sale.

Craft interpretive program will feature craftspeople demonstrating historic, ethnic and traditional crafts. Program is continuing to seek people who have specialized skills that are indigenous to northern Minnesota, but may not be readily recognized as crafts, such as soap making, wagon wheel construction, barrel making and so forth.

Demonstrations are scheduled from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday through Sunday from mid-June through Labor day. Craftspeople receive an honorarium for their appearances. This is an educational program, intended to bring Itasca park visitors into closer touch with the region's craft activities.

Artists and craftspeople who would like to take part in the Brower gallery, interpretive program, or retail shop are invited to apply. Applications are available from Up North Handcrafts, Hwy. 71 South, Route 3, Bemidji, MN 56601, phone (218) 751-0763. Application deadline is May 7.

Mark Skogerboe Seeks Senate Endorsement

Mark. R. Skogerboe, 34, has officially announced his candidacy for endorsement as Independent - Republican candidate for the Minnesota senate from District 1.

Endorsing convention for the district will be held at 7:30 p.m. next Monday, April 14, in the Thief River Falls city auditorium. Delegates elected at precinct caucuses within the district are eligible to vote at the endorsing convention.

Skogerboe grew up in Kittson county, graduating from Karlstad high school in 1963. He has four years of expeience as a farm worker, was employed in restaurants and eventually worked his way into management, later owning his own business. Presently he is a resident of Thief River Falls with his wife, the former Judy Iverson of this city, and their three children, Scot, Christine and Benjamin Franklin.

"I am running for this office because I believe strongly that all levels of government must once again serve the people, rather than just make life more complicated than it needs to be," he said. "I believe in a conservative political philosophy that is also very compassionate to each individual.

"I am convinced that the majority of people's problems can be solved more efficiently and less expensively at a lower level of government than many are currently dealt with. We must reduce taxes and improve the business climate in Minnesota so that we can provide jobs and opportunity for all of our citizens," he said.

"Every American is currently facing real trials because we have allowed ourselves to be led by liberals, and none of us can afford that any longer."

Senior Citizen Film To Air Medical Ins.

Senior citizens interested in how to get the greatest value out of their medical insurance dollar are invited to view a film to be shown Friday at 11:30 a.m. in the CNC chapel at Northwestern hospital in Thief River Falls.

The film, sponsored locally by the Northwest Underwriters association, is being shown Friday to participants in the senior meals and activity program which meets daily at the hospital. Persons who do not take part in the meals program are also invited to view the film, however, according to senior meals officials.

Area insurance representatives are concerned about the number and types of policies being sold to senior citizens by unscrupulous companies and agents, most of which provide little or no medical insurance value in relation to their cost.

The Minnesota insurance department advises senior citizens not to purchase a health insurance policy, particularly a medicare supplement, unless they fully understand what the policy covers and whether or not it does, indeed, supplement the basic medicare protection.

Sponsors of the Friday program emphasize that it is being presented for information only and that no sales efforts are connected with the event.

Port visits afforded him and his fellow crewmembers the opportunity to visit Cairo and the pyramids of Giza, as well as sightseeing in Alexandria, and to tour Jerusalem, Bethlehem and Nazareth in Israel.

Albany is 637 feet long with a crew of 700. His ship is outfitted with guns, missiles and anti-submarine rockets.

WINNING MEDALS in competition is the goal of figure skaters everywhere, and Joyce and Todd Phelps show two of the medals they have won. The bronze medal at left was won by Joyce in St. Louis, Mo., early in March when she skated in the Intermediate Ladies freestyle event. The silver medal at right was won by Todd in the multi-state Southwestern championship competition. Joyce, playing catch-up to attain the skill level of others her age, is just beginning competition. Todd, nearly five years younger than his sister, has the benefit of a younger start. In nine competitions he has won five silver and four gold medals.

Joyce And Todd Phelps Find Joy In Skating

good progress, their instructors were encouraging and the time neared for them to return to Thief River Falls.

"That was when Joe asked me if I would stay in Colorado with the kids so that they could continue to skate," Mrs. Phelps said. "He has the real estate business here and won't leave that. I didn't think it was the thing to do. He's my best friend and I'm his best friend. But he knows how much the kids like to skate and he saw the frustration from the year before.

"We talked it over and he convinced me that when the kids are happy, he's happy, and that we should do this for them. It's not an ideal situation. But he comes out to visit for several days at a time, and when he does he can devote full time to the family. He'll watch the kids skate by the hour and we'll have family outings. They probably see as much of him now as when we were all in Thief River."

Joyce and Todd recognize the sacrifices being made in their behalf. "I would have done whatever was decided last summer and accepted it," Joyce affirms. "I'm glad we got the chance to stay because it is the only way to really improve and I'm working extra hard whenever I practice to get as good as I can as fast as I can."

Joyce attends a high school which is part of the public school system but has a lot of skaters for students. She gets credit for physical education with her skating and by eliminating study halls she gets her required four subjects in half a day. She sometimes has a couple of hours of homework and she has maintained an "A" average while a student there.

On a typical day she is up at 5 a.m. and her mother gives her a ride to the Broadmoor Arena three miles away. She is skating school figures at 6 a.m., then goes to a freestyle lesson and practice.

With Joyce at the arena by 6 a.m., Rita Phelps returns home to get Todd, who is due at the arena for lessons and practice at 6:50 a.m. Joyce gets a ride home from Rita to get ready for school, which she attends from 9 a.m. to 12:25 p.m. When Joyce is dismissed at 12:25, Rita is waiting and Joyce dashes to the car and changes clothes enroute to the arena where she begins practice again at 12:30 p.m.

"The school is about a mile or so from the arena and we only have five minutes to make it, but we usually get it done," Mrs. Phelps said. "If we're a minute or so late, they hold a patch (reserved section of ice) for her because they know she is coming from school." Once back at the arena, Joyce will skate until 3:30 p.m.

When Todd finishes his morning stint from 6:50 to 8:15 a.m., he walks across the street to the elementary school where he is in fourth grade. At 3:40 he is back on the ice and skating school figures and freestyle, often taking a freestyle lesson in the evening as well.

Several days — or rather nights — each week, Joyce also takes ice dance lessons. Those begin at 10 p.m. and last until 1 a.m. It frequently happens that the 1 a.m. end of the ice dance lesson will immediately precede the 6 a.m. school figures patch.

It would seem to the uninitiated that so much skating would become boring to most people and especially youngsters of ages 15 and 10. Both Todd and Joyce have such a dedication to the sport, however, that they never seem to tire of it and keep pressing on to new goals and new experiences.

On many weekends Rita hauls the youngsters over to Littleton, Colo., about 70 miles from Colorado Springs. There they work on their jumps with an instructor who uses a rope, pulley and harness apparatus to build confidence and minimize falls and injury. Between times Joyce also gets in some ballet lessons to help her learn to use her long arms and legs (she's five feet nine inches tall) to advantage in appearing graceful and elegant in her skating routines. Both youngsters also work at gymnastics and stretching exercises off the ice.

The Broadmoor arena — where Colorado college plays its home hockey games — is utilized 24 hours a day. The hockey team from the high school where Joyce is a student practices at 4:45 a.m. The hockey players like to kid Joyce about how easy she has it, not having to be on the ice until 6 a.m.

After their visit back in Thief River Falls during a several day break in school schedules a couple of weeks ago, Rita, Joyce and Todd returned to Colorado Springs to begin preparation for future competition. Joyce recently won her first medal, a bronze for third place in Intermediate Ladies competition at St. Louis, Mo., in early March.

Todd, whose level of competition is lower and recognizing there are fewer boys than girls in competition, has been in nine competitions and won five silver and four gold medals. At St. Louis he placed second in compulsory moves in the Juvenile Men's class and won the interpretive skating and freestyle events.

Rita doesn't deny that the skating and maintaining two residences are expensive, nor that people of lesser means would not have the same choice of adopting a similar routine. She repeats, only half in jest, her husband's comment that they have put three sons through college and the two skaters about balance that out.

But they look on the effort as an investment in their children's future and recognize that the youngsters not only have natural physical ability but a mental perseverance and attitude that not all children possess.

Joyce wants to advance through the United States Figure Skating association's testing program to the gold medal level. She is presently at the fourth test level — about half way to the top. The road becomes steeper now, the moves more difficult, the skill level more selective and demending. Eventually she would like to teach skating and maybe perform with a professional ice show.

Todd has no illusions about his future. He likes to compete and ever since his earliest years while a crowd-pleaser at the local ice shows he has been turned on by crowds of spectators. He tries not to plan too far ahead. If he can be good enough, maintain his interest, continue to develop, one cannot overlook the fact that he will be 18 years old when the 1980 Olympics are held. Only a very few reach those heights, but they are the ones willing to sacrifice and work and compete and challenge themselves.

A number of years ago Todd was doing some hammering in the basement. Queried on what he was doing, he explained: "I'm building a box to keep my Olympic medals in." Maybe, just maybe, could his remarks have been prophetic?

Even at the tender age of 10, he displays a definite contact with reality. An example is his comment following Rita Phelps' explanation of the need for continuous year-around practice and lessons. "Unless you can skate year-round," she said, "you simply can't compete."

"You can," Todd said with a wry smile, "but you'll lose."

One gets the impression that Todd doesn't intend to do much of that.

Mrs. Sigrid Griebstein Is Young At 99

trips to the store had to be made occasionally to buy various items the family needed and could not grow themselves.

"We had to have meat," she said. "We'd buy coffee, sugar, oatmeal and things like that." She believed coffee was 18 cents a pound at that time, she said, although that was one of the few things she could not remember during the interview.

She remembers the task of baking bread for the family and leaving the bread set out to rise during the evening as everyone slept. "People don't do much of that anymore," she admitted, "and we didn't buy cakes in boxes either."

Coffee was ground after it was bought, and churning butter was an unfavorable task because it often took hours to obtain butter from the cream, she said. The length of time to produce butter depended upon the temperature of the cream.

Neighbors were "closer" in those days, even though the people lived farther apart than they are today, she said. People did more visiting.

"We'd hitch the horses up to a lumber wagon and off we'd go for a Sunday drive," she said.

Sigrid doesn't know if there was "entertainment" then. "We had ladies aid, picnics and children would put on programs at the church and school."

Traveling? Well, Sigrid hasn't done much of that as such, she said. But she did admit to sailing the ocean five times, which she feels is an ample amount of traveling for her — and a great accomplishment.

Sigrid has four children, several grandchildren, and "lots" of great-grandchildren, she said, smiling. Some of them arrived at the "home" during Easter to help her celebrate her birthday.

"I have lived through it all," she concluded, summarizing her life.

Her secret for staying healthy? "I wish I knew," she said.

There was absolutely no drinking or smoking in her life, she proudly stated. "That wasn't allowed in our family." As for a special diet, she said she eats whatever is put in front of her.

Sigrid turned 99 on Good Friday, and she still retains an excellent memory and a zest for living.

Open House At AVTI Slated For Tuesday

Visitors are invited to bring their cars to the auto mechanics department for a free diagnostic check. A $50 scholarship — offered by director Aune and assistant director Fred Ballou — will be awarded upon entry into school to a student selected from those enrolling during the open house.

Aune reminded potential enrollees that AVTI students are now eligible to compete on Northland community college athletic teams. He also encouraged those interested in financial aids to visit counselor Bob Reeve.

"We feel we have an excellent facility with exceptional program offerings to young people preparing for the world of work," Aune said. "The school district board, administration and faculty of the AVTI join in encouraging the public to visit the school, check on the departments available and have their questions answered during the open house session."

The Bureau of the Census will use 65,000 cardboard desks for clerical workers for the 1980 census because it's cheaper than renting furniture.

Mayor Carlson Comments On Week Of Child

Mayor Bob Carlson, Thief River Falls Mayor, had these words to say about the national week of the young child observed April 6-12.

"1979 was supposed to have been the International Year of the Child, and according to some analysts, it was nothing but bureaucratic waste by our government and the United Nations. I was terribly disappointed at the lack of national policy and direction. The purpose of the International Year of the Child was to establish a position and condition of children in the areas of education, health, welfare and justice. It just didn't happen in some parts of these United States.

"As an example, the Florida PTA refused to endorse an International Year of the Child because some members felt it had socialistic welfare state undertones. Some PTA delegates also feared that an International Year of the Child would encourage large families. As for children, themselves, they don't seem to know they've been people of the year.

"A poll of third graders at one public elementary school showed complete ignorance of fact. These pupils thought the International Year of the Child was, among other things, an encyclopedia, an event for people in wheelchairs or something sponsored by Jerry Lewis. What I'm trying to point out is that April 6-12 has been proclaimed by me locally as the week of your child: Children — the Energy of the Future," the mayor said.

"We have many activities going on this week in Thief River Falls and I urge you to take time to visit displays at the Northwest regional library, art displays at the Falls Mall and the five open house programs in other parts of the city.

The open house schedule is as follows:

Thief River Falls preschool program at Mark Twain elementary school, 8:30 to 11 a.m., Wednesday; children and parents learning together program at Mark Twain elementary school, 8:30 to 2:30 p.m., Wednesday; Discovery place, 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and 2:30 to 5 p.m. Tuesday; Thief River Falls nursery school, 9 to 11 a.m., Friday; and Falls day activity center by appointment;

"Please, the children deserve your time and effort," Mayor Carlson said.

The CETA center is located at 1904 East Greenwood Drive, just off highway 59 south, behind the Country Kitchen. Anyone interested is invited to stop by for coffee.

NCC Theater Production Set April 10-12

Northland theatre will present its production of "A Company of Wayward Saints" in the Northland community college theatre Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. The company consists of a group of actors noted for their ability to improvise upon plots, scenes and themes familiar to their audiences, similar to the old commedia dell-arte companies which have toured the European continent for centuries.

In this play, the company is requested by a nobleman in the audience to earn their passage home by performing a show representing the history of man. They choose to include scenes including Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, the assassination of Julius Ceasar, the homecoming of Odysseus to Penelope, which are representative of mankind in birth, adolescence, marriage and death, all presented in a comic tone.

The play is a delightful combination of the slapstick comedy style of commedia dell'arte, and of the byplay between the actors in the troupe as they attempt to perform together as a collective ensemble, while their individual egos, pride and arrogance get in their way.

This show is under the direction of Roger Vaughan and the cast includes Mark Ash from Humboldt; Chris Kneen from White Bear Lake; Dan Levenhagen from Lake Bronson; and Chris Kays, Randy Moe, Terry Boich, Diane Lusignan, Heidi Fredeen and Carla Reed from Thief River Falls. This production is sponsored free of charge to the public by Northland community college. The production will also be staged at the Minnesota community college fine arts festival in Bloomington Friday, April 18.

LHS Students Attend Model United Nations

Peter Eriksson

Kathy Paulson

Kathy Paulson and Peter Eriksson will represent Lincoln senior high school at the model United Nations assembly in Winnipeg, Manitoba. The event will be held at the Red River community college April 10-13 and is sponsored by the Rotary club. Students will be housed in the homes of Rotarians of Winnipeg. Darwin Boutliette, an instructor at Lincoln, will prepare them for participation in the event.

Kathy and Peter will represent the nation of Cyprus this year. The three resolutions they must address include the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan, exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and an evaluation of the United Nations.

Peter will speak to the issue of the human rights concerning the Palestinian people and defend the rights of minorities anywhere in the world. Kathy will speak to the deplorability of the invasion of Afghanistan and the disastrous results from imperialism whether it be with troops or the use of superior technology.

Boutliette expresses appreciation to the Rotary club from Thief River Falls for sponsoring these two students. "This program is a valuable experience in understanding the delicate balance in international relations. Unfortunately, due to work to rule, I will be unable to accompany these students this year," Boutliette said.

Search Is On For Teacher Of The Year

Search for 1980's Minnesota teacher of the year — the 17th annual — has been narrowed to 33 "Teachers of excellence". None of the nominees from this area are included on the list.

These 33 have been selected by a panel of 17 men and women — representing large and small teacher preparation institutions both public and nonpublic, school boards, ethnic minorities, news media, business and industry, the state education department, the lay public, the judiciary, parents, teachers and students — from 182 nominees.

From the 33, an honor roll of teachers will be chosen, from which, in turn, the state's teacher of the year will be selected. Minnesota's current Teacher of the Year is Charles I Funk of Motley.

Each of the 33 men and women will receive a framed certificate of excellence during the open-to-the public luncheon August 24 at Radisson South hotel during the first Sunday of the Minnesota state fair, when the 1980 Minnesota teacher of the year will be announced. That person will be nominated by the Minnesota commissioner of education for 1981 national teacher of the year.

Purpose of the Minnesota program — sponsored jointly by the Minnesota state fair, which will present a $500 scholarship to the Minnesota ToY at the luncheon, and the Minnesota education association (MEA) — is to focus public attention on the thousands of outstanding teachers in Minnesota's public, private and parochial schools.

House Agrees To Reopen '79 Loan Program

House of Representatives Tuesday adopted legislation giving the department of agriculture authority to reopen the 1970 loan program to farmers who did not participate. The measure, which earlier cleared the senate, is similar to a bill introduced by Senator Rudy Boschwitz and approved by the Senate agriculture committee.

Boschwitz said, "I supported the measure when it passed the Senate and am pleased that it has now passed the House. I hope President Carter will sign the legislation which will provide farmers with the opportunity to obtain loans for the 1980 crop."

The bill proposed by Boschwitz would have provided for higher loan rates on the 1979 program, but that measure was roundly criticized by Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland.

"The department of agriculture then requested exactly the same authority to reopen the program, but at existing loan rates rather than the higher rates I had proposed," Boschwitz said. "Farmers need help and they need cash to begin work on the new crop," Boschwitz said, "and this will at least provide them some immediate funds. I do not feel the measure is as good as the one I offered," he said, "but I supported it because it has a realistic chance of being signed by the President and farmers need help now."

Anonymous Gift Given To University

An anonymous donor has given an $800,000 endowment through the University of Minnesota foundation to the college of pharmacy.

Of the total amount, $600,000 will be used to establish the first endowed chair in pharmacy, "recognizing the pioneering efforts of the college, its outstanding leadership, and its excellent programs." The other $200,000 will be used to endow undergraduate scholarships, "assuring that deserving students of all income levels might aspire to a career in pharmacy."

The donor's anonymity is a condition of the endowment. Pharmacy Dean L. C. Weaver said, "the endowment comes at a time when the college is completing the first facility ever built for its various programs and establishing a single professional doctor of pharmacy degree. I can think of no gift more appropriate than an endowment which permits us to attract internationally known scholars in any pharmaceutical field or discipline."

Dr. Lyle A. French, vice president for health sciences, called the endowment "one of the most imaginative and exciting gifts in the history of the college. Future generations will benefit from the wisdom and foresight of the donor."

Cutbacks Save On Resources, Pocketbooks

All farmers are aware of the high production costs staring at them for 1980, especially fuel and fertilizer. People should be looking for ways and items they can cut back, thus preserving resources and also saving on pocketbooks, according to Allan Gustafson, district conservationist at the soil conservation service (SCS) in Thief River Falls.

Reducing the number of spring and fall tillage operations is one way a farmer can cut fuel and time costs. Here are some examples:

(1) when plowing grain stubble — leave it — do not hit that ground with another operation.

(2) if you apply anhydrous in the fall on plowing, incorporate fertilizer through the cultivator — do not use another extra operation. On some ground, there could be some anhydrous loss, but one has to calculate if 10 to 15 per cent loss justifies another tillage operation.

Also (3) use a chisel plow of disc rather than a mold-board plow, and limit your operation to one or two.

(4) on summerfallow — do not keep ground black and as smooth as a kitchen table — limit those tillage operations to the essential ones.

"I cannot put enough stress on taking soils tests at least every three years on each field," Gustafson said. "These tests are an excellent guide in your fertilizer program, and will provide you a way to get maximum benefit of the fertilizer applied."

Contact the local SCS or extension office with any questions on minimum tillage.

Reforming Uncontrollable Spending

Following editorial is from Washington Report:

The concept that large areas of federal spending are out of control has always been highly disturbing to business people. Cost control is usually a matter of survival for them.

In Washington, however, many major spending programs have been operating on the theory that no spending limits should be set and taxpayers must come up with as much money as was needed.

This concept of uncontrollable spending is now being challenged under pressure of administration and congressional drives to cut the federal budget in an attempt to slow the soaring inflation rate.

Those efforts have reached the door of the so-called uncontrollable programs. It was inevitable. Those programs represent 75 per cent of all federal spending and any significant budget cuts would have to involve the "uncontrollables".

While those items totaled $140 billion in the federal budget for 1971, they total $471 billion in the budget President Carter has proposed for fiscal 1981.

How does a federal program reach the exalted status of "uncontrollable"?

It usually starts out as a relatively small activity to provide benefits to individuals for a specific purpose — Social Security, welfare, unemployment compensation, health care, for example.

A common denominator of such programs is that they are open-ended—everyone who can meet the eligibility requirements must be given the benefits. No dollar limits on spending are set.

Frequently the benefits are tied to the Consumer Price Index. As that index rises, so does the amount of the benefits.

Once the two elements are in place — open-ended enrollment and indexing — the programs expand in size and cost without further action by Congress, beyond assuring adequate financing.

But that approach never anticipated an inflation rate that reached 13.3 per cent last year and will approach 20 per cent this year if present trends continue.

The review of the concept of the uncontrollable spending has led to a reexamination of the indexing aspect, and there is a growing concern that direct indexing has caused excessive increases in benefits.

In the Social Security area, for example, the higher payments will reflect the fact that the Consumer Price Index measures, along with the cost of food, energy, and other basics the elderly purchase, the cost of home purchases, which contributed to the steep overall increase in the CPI.

But few of the elderly receiving Social Security benefits are still affected directly by trends in real-estate values and mortgage rates.

In its new study on ways to cut federal spending, the Congressional Budget Office says:

"If a different (cost-of-living) index, modified to correct for such distortions, were promptly adopted as the measure for adjusting federal benefits now tied to the CIP, outlay savings over the next five years could be about $30 billion.

"The affected programs would be Social Security, railroad retirement, Supplemental Security income, veterans' pensions, and military and civil service retirement, with about 44 million primary beneficiaries and their dependents."

An important element of reforming the indexing provisions of federal programs lies in the fact that a revised index would still recognize the rising costs of the items beneficiaries do purchase, but would also attempt to prevent massive overall increases in federal outlays to cover higher costs of items those beneficiaries do not normally purchase.

Under the pressure of the current economic crisis, Congress might well be forced into conceding that any of the uncontrollable budget items can be controlled after all

About Lakes And Ice

Ever wonder what the scientific reason is for ice forming on the tops of lakes and not freezing way to the bottom? Sue O'Connell has this explanation "Lid on the Lakes" in a recent "Conservation News"

As days grow cold and nights still, an ice lid forms on many lakes. If water behaved like most other substances, water bodies could freeze from bottom to top and never thaw completely during the summer. While other materials become more dense as temperatures drop, water reaches its greatest density near 39 degrees, then gets lighter with increasing cold. This is why ice cubes float instead of sink.

Differences in water density are important because they provide a winter oxygen supply for aquatic organisms. As fall approaches, lake waters cool, sinking when they reach 39 degrees. During this overturn, the mixing water picks up oxygen and carries it to the lake bottom for winter sustenance of lake plants and animals. In the spring, the lower lake area is given a deep breath of fresh air as waters warm and overturn.

Ice lids act as insulation, preventing the rest of the water from freezing. Organisms are able to survive in chilly lower waters; they would not be able to if lakes froze upward from the bottom. Cold blooded animals like fish decrease activity during the winter so they need less food and oxygen. Sunlight can penetrate ice, continuing photosynthesis and oxygen production.

But if snow cover blocks out light, lake dwellers must depend on that oxygen mixed into water during the fall overturn. If this proves insufficient, winter kill occurs.

Carter? Unbelievable!

Following comments were written by Ralph Mason in his "High Finance" column in a recent issue of Skyway News in Minneapolis:

One of the things that is hard to understand is why the popularity of President Carter has been increasing — at least according to the various polls. Perhaps it is because people have such short memories.

In working on this column, I amass piles and piles of clippings — to the horror and dismay of my child bride. One of these recently floated to the top . . . a report of a speech made by candidate Carter in 1976.

In his campaign oratory, Carter criticized the preceding Republican administrations for their federal deficits averaging $24 billion a year. As everyone knows, despite Carter's pledge to balance the budget, deficits have averaged $33 billion a year during his term of office.

Carter in 1976 charged Republicans with "the highest interest rates since the Civil War." He was especially critical over home mortgage rates which had reached nine per cent. Anyone trying to buy a home today knows that mortgages range from 11 to 13 per cent, plus points. And since Carter took office the prime interest rate for banks has more than doubled, reaching up to 20 per cent.

In 1976 Carter lambasted President Ford, citing "disastrous" policies that had caused industrial workers to sustain a sharp decline in real purchasing power. The federal government's own figures show that the decline in buying power under Carter has more than doubled.

In 1976 Carter said: "The Republicans have become six percenters on inflation. They ask us to accept that rate, to think of six per cent inflation as normal, to be glad it isn't worse." Recent government reports state that inflation during 1979 galloped along at more than 13 per cent.

To put the current status bluntly, unemployment is rising, productivity in our factories is declining, worker's take-home pay in real money is at the lowest level since 1964, family savings have never been lower in the last half century, and despite Carter's pledges for "honesty" in government, a number of his closest associates are facing investigations of their conduct.

After three years of down-grading our military strength, Carter, like a schoolboy on the playground, has drawn a line in the Middle East and warned the school bully, Russia, not to cross it. The Russians, who are certainly aware that not a single U.S. division is at full strength, must be amused and amazed. Carter's naivete was painfully evident when he petulantly announced that Brezhnev has "lied" to him, although Russian leaders have been lying and breaking treaties for 60 years.

And against this backdrop, Carter's popularity is growing. Unbelievable . . .

Borrowed Nonsense:

Rumor is out that Vice President Walter Mondale has been selected to make two awards: One is to be given to President Jimmy Carter as "Inflation Fighter of the Year" and the other posthumously to the captain of the Titanic as "Sailor of the Year".

Middle age is the time of life when one voice inside us says "Why not?" and another one more loudly asks, "Why bother?"

ALTHOUGH EXPERIENCED in competition, Todd Phelps is still a 10-year-old with school to attend and a number of boyhood interests. He loves curling and speed skating in addition to figure skating and recently scored four goals to lead his in-house hockey team to a 5-1 victory in the morning, then went to an afternoon figure skating competition and won a gold medal.

Dairy Farmers To Vote On Dairy Council

On April 15, Minnesota dairy farmers will have the opportunity to elect 11 dairy farmers to the board of directors of the Minnesota dairy promotion council, according to executive director Cliff Markuson.

County extension offices will serve as polling places and will be open from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. on election day. In Marshall county the American state bank in Grygla will also be a polling place.

Candidates from District I, which includes Becker, Beltrami, Cass, Clay, Clearwater, Hubbard, Itasca, Kittson, Koochiching, Lake of the Woods, Mahnomen, Marshall, Norman, Pennington, Polk, Red Lake, Roseau and Wadena counties, are incumbent Howard Neumann of Ada and Gordon A. Mitchel of Audubon.

Neumann, 45, operates 320 acres in Norman county, milks 50 Holstein cattle, markets his milk through Cass-Clay creamery and is chairman of the Norman county ADA chapter.

Mitchel, 62, operates 900 acres in Becker county, milks 120 Holsteins, markets his milk through Mid-America Dairymen, Inc. and serves on the county ADA board.

Minnesota dairy promotion council, a farmer-financed and controlled organization, has as its purpose to increase dairy farmer incomes by increasing sales of milk and dairy products. Markuson said the dairy farmers who serve on the board of directors of the Minnesota dairy promotion council are solely responsible for determining how dairy farmer dollars are to be used for dairy product promotion and research and for this reason stressed the importance of the election.

Markuson said the promotion concept is a positive way for dairy farmers to help themselves collectively in a way that they could not achieve as individuals.

"The Minnesota dairy promotion council becomes especially important in light of the changes that are taking place in consumer buying habits, the food industry and the market place in general," he said. "To keep milk and dairy products before the public's eye and mind takes constant work and effort by the Minnesota dairy promotion council board. This is why it is so important to elect the right people for the promotion board."

Senator Says Diversion Plan Seems Blocked

Administration efforts to block a paid diversion program proved successful when the measure mandating such a plan failed to reach the Senate floor, according to Sen. Rudy Boschwitz.

The bill, sponsored by Sen. Boschwitz, was scheduled for floor action, but the objection of the administration prevented that move. The agriculture department had indicated its opposition to the measure when it massed in the senate agriculture committee early last month.

Boschwitz said "the measure would have set up a diversion program paying farmers $1.25 per bushel not to plant corn and feedgrains and $1.50 per bushel not to plant wheat." The bill was designed to remove 12 million metric tons of corn and feedgrains and four million metric tons of wheat from the surplus accumulated as a result of the Russian grain embargo.

"The surplus resulting from the grain embargo, coupled with increased production estimates," Boschwitz said, "will have a disastrous effect on the market this fall.

"By delaying action on the measure today, "the opposition has for all practical purposes killed the bill. The Senate will break tomorrow for a week and when they return it will be too late to adopt legislation having any effect on the 1980 planting.

"I am disappointed," Boschwitz said, "that the administration is not living up to its pledge to help farmers suffering as a result of the grain embargo. But the action today indicates they have no intention of helping the farmer out of the price squeeze their actions have placed him in."

Cholesterol Study Made By University

"Can heart attacks be prevented by lowering cholesterol?" That is the question posed by a team of University of Minnesota doctors conducting a study of the relationship between cholesterol and heart disease.

"Heart disease is the leading cause of death and disability in the United States," said Dr. Henry Buchwald, the head of the Twin Cities based study. Nearly all heart disease results from atherosclerosis, or hardening of the arteries — the tubes which must continually supply blood containing life-giving oxygen and nourishment to the heart and other organs.

Atherosclerosis gradually thickens and narrows arteries until blood can no longer flow through them; the result of this narrowing is usually acute illness, the most prevalent of which is a heart attack. According to Dr. Buchwald, cholesterol, a fatty substance, is found in diseased arteries and may represent a clue to the cause of atherosclerosis. Also, the amount of cholesterol found in our blood can predict, somewhat, how likely we are to have heart attacks.

Facts such as these have led many doctors to use various means to lower blood cholesterol in their patients; it is still uncertain, however, whether such lowering can actually prevent heart attacks.

University of Minnesota research team is now seeking individuals from 27 through 64 years of age who have had only one heart attack in the past five years. Such individuals may obtain more information about the study by calling the University of Minnesota hyperlipidemia study collect—at 612-376-4494.

Hypnotist To Entertain At Northland CC

John Kolisch

John Kolisch, considered to be the world's fastest hypnotist, will again be performing at Northland community college Thursday at 10 a.m. in the auditorium. Public is invited to attend free of charge.

As in the past, Kolisch will stagger the minds of the people who will be in attendance. During his program volunteers from the audience will be guided through hilarious and mystifying activities. Skeptics will become believers as Kolisch performs his "phenomena of the mind", according to college officials responsible for the scheduling.

Johnny Carson of the "Tonight Show" said this about his appearance on his show, "Kolisch's performance is one of the brightest and the funniest in our profession today." After three hours, the audience will agree that they are witness to a fantastic show.

No less than four area high school basketball players joined the ranks of 1,000-point scorers during the 1979-80 season.

Earlier it was reported that Todd Robinson of Lake of the Woods, Kim Brekke of Warren and Diane Fisher of Plummer completed their high school basketball careers as members of the prestigious 1,000-point club in Minnesota that is kept and updated annually by coaches reporting to the West Central Daily Tribune in Willmar.

Fisher not only broke the 1,000-point barrier this winter, she established a new girls Region 8A scoring standard with 1,353 points. Brekke finished with 1,208 points.

But also quietly reaching the coveted 1,000-point plateau during the 1979-80 season was Scott McKeever, a 5-9 Middle River junior. With one year of high school basketball still remaining, McKeever already has 1,103 points.

A forward-guard who played briefly on the varsity as a freshmen before making a bit splash as a sophomore starter, McKeever scored 407 points this season, averaging 20.3 points per game. He was a 48 per cent shooter from the field, hitting mostly 12-15-footers.

"He's only 5-9, but he jumps as well as a 6-2 kid," praises Middle River coach Eldon Sparby. "He's very quick. He's not terribly fast, but he's quick and he gets his shots off."

With only three seniors on a strong 16-4 team this winter and four of their five starters returning, the Skippers are expecting a strong 1980-81 season. And with that much support, McKeever is likely to add another 400-or-so points to his scoring total next winter.

McKeever was a member of the 1979 Thief River Falls American Legion baseball team. But he'll be opposing Thief River Falls this spring when the Skippers will be a new addition to the Lincoln high school baseball schedule, appearing here Mon., May 12.

Fisher, Brekke and Robinson are all recruiting targets for Northland community college coaches this spring. McKeever will be a top prospect next year. Bill Gusa, Mike Peterson and Mike Carriere are all Middle River graduates who have played well for the Northmen in the past. Gusa and Peterson were members of Northland's 20-5 MJCAA state place state tournament team in 1973-74; Gusa came back and played a key role in Northland's 19-5 state tournament team; and Carriere was instrumental in Northland's success that produced Northwest Division titles the past two years and a third place MJCAA state tournament finish this winter.

Miscellaneous

+Lynn Christensen, at 6-2 the starting center for the Detroit Lakes high school girls basketball team over the past three years, has been given a full scholarship to attend Arizona State University after displaying her basketball skills for ASU coach Juliene Simpson during a recent weekend visit to Tempe. Pepperdine, Concordia, Moorhead State and St. Cloud State had also shown interest in Christensen.

After watching his team lose to Thief River Falls 5-0 Thursday, Crookston tennis coach Jim Myrold told Lori Mateer of the Crookston Times, "They (Prowlers) are just an awesome team. Maybe they'll show the people in the southern part of the state that the north can produce some competitive teams." "I had my four best players at doubles for this match and they played well. It's just hard to look good against them (TRF)."

+Anoka high school, coached at one time by former Thief River Falls hockey standout Joey Poole, is looking for another hockey coach. Rick Kristo, a Bemidji State University graduate, handed in his resignation as coach of the Tornadoes April 1, just one year after succeeding former Roseau coach Terry Abram at the Anoka post. Lack of ice time for practice, a split teaching position and the financial rewards in the business world were listed as Kristo's reasons for resigning.

TRF Backcourt Club Meeting Set Saturday

Thief River Falls basketball Backcourt Club will hold an organizational meeting Saturday at 9:30 a.m. in the back room of the Rex Cafe.

The agenda will include the formation of a summer basketball program for grades 3-11; planning money-making projects; recruiting volunteer help for year-around supervision in school gyms; and election of club officers.

Parental involvement in the program is being stressed. All parents who have children involved in basketball in grades 3-11 are strongly urged to attend.

"We feel we can easily improve the opportunities our children have to play basketball in Thief River Falls, but we can only do it through your interest and involvement," stress Frank Womack, current Backcourt Club president, and Vern Treat, program coordinator.

Bill Kottke

Bill Kottke To Have Golf Class At Northland

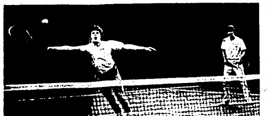
Because of public interest, Bill Kottke, dean of instruction, Northland community college will again be instructing an advanced golf class.

The class will begin Tues., April 15, at 7 p.m. in the Northland college gymnasium with a fee charge of $15 for five once-a-week sessions with maximum class limited to 20 registrants. Students are requested to bring a driver (No. 1) wood and a No. 9 iron to the first meeting.

Kottke has an extensive background as a playing and teaching professional. During his 22 years as a member of the professional golfer's association of America (PGA), Bill served as a professional at golf and country clubs in Minnesota, Michigan, North Dakota and Texas.

Bill Kottke is listed in the Minnesota golf association book entitled, "Minnesota Golf — 75 Years of Tournament History" for his play in the Minnesota state open and the Minnesota PGA.

"This is not a class for beginners," said Bill Kottke. "New ideas relating to the full swing, the short game and putting will be stressed".



TOM BJORKMAN stretched to return a shot while Thief River Falls teammate Paul Koppang looked on Thursday during Thief River Falls' 1980 season-opening high school tennis match against Crookston in the Grand Forks Tennis Center. Bjorkman and Koppang defeated Dan Hoff and John Erie 6-3, 7-5 in No. 1 doubles as part of the Prowlers' 5-0 victory.

Lincoln Track Season Opens With NWAC Meet

Winner of eight Northwest Athletic Conference track titles over the past five years Bemidji is once again the overwhelming favorite heading into Tuesday's 1980 NWAC indoor tack and field meet scheduled to be held in the Winter Shows building at Crookston beginning at 4 p.m.

The Lumberjacks, who have won five straight conference outdoor meets, took home NWAC indoor titles in 1976, 1978 and 1979. Only Fergus Falls with an indoor championship in 1979 has broken Bemidji's recent conference track domination that is expected to continue with a strong 1980 squad.

NWAC Indoor Champs

1979	Bemidji
1978	Bemidji
1977	Fergus Falls
1975	Thief River Falls
1974	Crookston
1973	Thief River Falls

TEAM CAPTAIN Greg Ness and head coach Bill McGann took a break from Lincoln high school track practice for a Times photo last week. The Prowlers will open their 1980 season Tuesday by participating in the Northwest Athletic Conference indoor metet at Crookston beginning at 4 p.m. in the Winter Shows building.

East Grand Forks, it would appear, is the only NWAC competitor who might present a challenge to Bemidji's superiority.

"We should have a strong a team as we've had," reported East Grand Forks coach Gary Berg. "We should be sound in every event. The potential is there."

However, Berg, too, admits Bemidji is the NWAC favorite.

Host Crookston, Fergus Falls and Thief River Falls will round out the Northwest Athletic Conference track field.

It'll be the 1980 season-opener for the Prowlers, coached again this year by Bill McGann and John Kopari. But a switch in positions because of Kopari's duties as swimming coach will find McGann serving as head coach of the track team, with Kopari as his assistant. The roles were reversed in the past.

"We're young, green and inexperienced," mused McGann. "We're looking for our distance people to do well for us. The others we hope will come along."

Thief River Falls' top point producers are expected to be seniors Greg Ness, a top-notch miler, and Mark Broadwell, a half-miler; juniors Todd Bergland, a strong two-miler, and Kevin Grochow, who will run in the 440 and relays; and sophomore Bruce Johnson who enjoyed a surprisingly successful season as a freshman distance runner a year ago.

Ness is serving as the Prowlers' 1980 track captain.

Rest of the team members include:

Seniors — Cory Nelson, distance events; Bob Kinsman, sprints and relays.

Sophomores — Paul Wennberg, sprints; Steve Hvidsten, sprints and hurdles; Keith Grochow, high jump and long jump; Terry Johnson, middle distance; Steve Dalager, middle distance; Matt Grabanski, middle distance; Kevin Leach, high jump; Paul Wasswick, middle distance; Rob Jorstad, weights; Jon Ness, weights.

Freshmen — Lon Aune, Jim Gobell, Jerry Kertz, Grant Anderson, Steve Kruta, Chuck Lowell, Eric Henderson, John Pinsonneault.

Eighth grade — Kevin Kezar.

"It's pretty hard to see just what we have until we get into a meet," noted McGann.

That opportunity will come Tuesday.

Trout Streams Open April 12 In Minnesota

All Minnesota trout streams will be open to fishing on April 12, the Department of Natural Resources said — noting that those in several southern counties of the state opened on March 1.

The opening of trout angling in streams includes those in the Lake Superior watershed above the posted boundaries.

Officials called attention to the differing limits and size restrictions in effect on the various streams. Below the posted boundaries of Lake Superior streams, including Lake Superior itself, the limit is five and the fish must be at least 10 inches in length or returned to the stream when caught.

At the same time, no more than three of the fish may be 16 inches in length or over.

Above the posted boundaries of Lake Superior streams, the trout limit is 10 and anglers are not required to return fish smaller than 10 inches to the water.

The requirement that no more than three trout of 16 inches length or longer may be kept does apply in those waters, however, as it does in all other state streams.

The limit in state trout streams (other than Lake Superior streams above the posted boundaries) is five PLAYING AT the net in second doubles, Thief River Falls' Bill Holmes had to react quickly to a Crookston return during Thursday's season-opening high school tennis match played in the Grand Forks Tennis Center. Holmes and Mark Ludin defeated the Pirates' Paul Sullivan and Bill Straw 6-7, 6-2, 6-3. The Prowlers won 5-0.

Prowlers Beat Crookston 5-0

Straight-set victories in four of the five matches highlighted Thief River Falls season-opening 5-0 high school tennis win over Crookston Thursday in the Grand Forks Tennis Center.

The Prowlers overpowered the Pirates in singles as Bill Jury handled Bruce Stahlberg 6-0, 6-1; Mitch Rustad blanked Paul Miller 6-0, 6-0; and Mark Collins defeated Scott Smith 6-2, 6-2.

First-time Thief River Falls doubles combinations were presented with more of a challenge by the Pirates, who dropped their better tennis players into doubles.

But the Prowlers still came out on top as Tom Bjorkman and Paul Koppang knocked off Dan Hoff and John Erie 6-3, 7-5 while Bill Holmes and Mark Lundin bounced back from a first set tie-breaker loss to handle Paul Sullivan and Bill Straw 6-7, 6-2, 6-3.

"For our first match I thought they played well," reported Thief River Falls coach Whitey Olson.

Ranked No. 1 in the state Class AA tennis polls, the Prowlers will be back in action Thursday with a 2 p.m. triangular in East Grand Forks that will also involve Moorhead. Thief River Falls will compete in a quadrangular event at Brainerd Saturday before opening its home season schedule Mon., April 14, against Bemidji.

Future Is Bright For Goodridge Basketball

A strong late-season surge by the youthful Huskies helped erase memories of a season that produced 14 losses and has Goodridge high school basketball coach Rick Nelson already looking forward to the 1980-81 campaign.

"Injuries to leading players Randy Henrickson and Carroll Bishop hurt the team's success in the win-loss column," noted Nelson. "But the late-season jell was a positive note for next season, and with seven of the top nine returning next year, success of the past may return for the Huskies."

The loss of Henrickson was the toughest blow to the Huskies who played most of the middle of the season without the services of their dominant performer.

Even so, Henrickson still led the Huskies in scoring, rebounding and field goal shooting percentage, averaging 14 points and nine rebounds per game while shooting at a 43 per cent clip from the field in the 12 games he played. The 6-3 junior also ranked second in the free throw percentage figures, hitting 40 of 59 attempts for 67.8 per cent.

Bishop, a 6-1 junior, matched Henrickson's team-leading 113 rebounds, but he only missed three starts compared to Henrickson's seven-game absence and averaged seven rebounds per game, along with 5.5 scoring average and team-leading 68.8 free throw shooting percentage as he sank 22 of 32 from the line. He also led the Huskies with 40 steals or loose ball recoveries.

Neil Race, one of only two seniors on the team (Terry Drangstveit was the other), was second on the team scoring charts with a 7.9 average and led the Huskies with 54 assists.

Goodridge finished the 1979-80 season with a 5-14 record, but the Huskies won three in a row to close out the regular season and took four of their last five starts after winning just once in their first 12 games.

The wins came over Grygla 42-38 and 55-44, Strandquist 57-42, Fisher 54-42 and Oslo 58-55. Regular season losses came at the hands of Middle River 67-39, Plummer 37-33, Oklee 55-46, Red Lake Falls 47-43 and 47-41, East Grand Forks Sacred Heart 64-54, Stephen 63-50, Badger 48-45, Mentor 41-32, Warren 46-10, Alvarado 63-54, Argyle 95-46 and Climax 47-39. The Huckies lost their first round District 31 tournament game to Oslo 66-53.

Wildlife Group Offers Summer Vacation Trips

National Wildlife Federation, the nation's largest nonprofit citizens conservation group, has announced its summer vacation plans: five back-to-nature vacations designed for young campers, singles, couples and entire families.

The vacations recommended for whole families are NWF's unique one-week conservation summits, specializing in conservation education for outdoorspeople of all ages. This year's summits will be held at conference centers in the Blue Ridge mountains of North Carolina, June 21 through 27; the Rocky mountains of Colorado, July 6 through 12; the Adirondack mountains of New York, July 20 through 26; and on Green Lake in Wisconsin, August 9 through 15.

A summit is a week-long, intensive exposure to a wide variety of conservation-related subjects. "Classrooms" are the surrounding mountains, forests, lakes and streams.

NWF also has an award-winning summer program exclusively for young campers, ages nine to 13: Ranger Rick wildlife camps. Held in four 12-day sessions, the coeducational wildlife campsite is located near Henderson, North Carolina, in the Blue Ridge mountains. This year's sessions will be from June 29 to July 10; July 12 to 23; July 25 to August 5; and August 7 to 18.

Faculty at both summits and camps consist of college students and graduates, teachers, and the federation's staff experts. At wildlife camp, the ratio of campers to staff is just six to one.

Costs for a family of four at a conservation summit range from $570 to $845. At wildlife camp, cost per camper is $306. At wildlife camp and at most conservation summits, arrangements are made for charter busing to and from nearby airports.

For more information and registration forms, write Conservation Summits or Wildlife Camps, National Wildlife Federation, Dept. CSW, 1412 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

Minnesota Outdoors

Lake Vermilion

Many years ago the Minnesota Lakes Association held a beauty contest among Minnesota lakes. Lake Vermilion judged to be the most beautiful lake in the state. Lake Koronis at Paynesville was second place winner.

While at the recent sport show we had a visit with Bob and Gerlinde Ward of Everett Bay Lodge on Lake Vermilion out of Tower. They reported test nets have shown that Lake Vermilion has more walleyes per square acre than any other lake of comparable size. For years we have rated Basswood Lake at Ely and Vermilion in a tie for top honors.

Reminder

It's time for Minnesota boat owners to send their license fees and renewal applications in to the Department of Natural Resources. These licenses must be renewed before the boat can legally be placed in public waters. Notices have been sent out by the DNR License Center to boat owners whose licenses expired in 1979.

BWCA Report

Bud Kratoska, executive secretary of the Minnesota Cook county civic council at Grand Marias, has given us this up-to-date report on the BWCA:

"We up in the north country are very much upset and at a loss trying to cope with a very touchy and delicate situation concerning the BWCA legislation passed in 1978.

The government has purchased four reports, as well as other properties in Cook county and in time this will seriously affect our tax rolls. This makes us wonder what is going to be done with the cabins, buildings, etc. on these resorts. We have questioned the forest service and no one seems to have any answers. Will they be torn down, burned, sold or will the bureaucrats go into competition with the existing reports?

In our travels around the midwest to the various sport shows, we have talked to hundreds of people who have very strongly supported the wilderness bill to the hilt. Little did they realize that their support has eventually taken away a portion of what they enjoyed too. There are many that have been saddened over the fact that their favorite resort will no longer be there; a favorite fishing hole can't be reached unless by canoe; and we have sensed a feeling of dejection by John Q. Public over the whole mess.

Once again, we in the tour travel business — and it seems like we've been doing it for years with new restrictions and regulations coming up all the time — need to educate the fisherman and outdoorsman and let him know that he can still drive up highway 61, the North Shore, the Sawbill or the Gunflint Trail without getting a permit to visit Cook county. A lot has been taken away from us over the years recreationally but guess it's a case of taking up the belt again one more notch.

There has been an appropriation of $85,000 from the Upper Great Lakes regional commission, another $60,000 combined from the forest service and the University of Minnesota agricultural extension service to be used solely for the purpose of letting people in the midwest know that they can still enjoy a vacation in beautiful Minnesota. A series of newspaper ads are being run in Chicago, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Omaha, Des Moines and other cities. Also, announcements are being made on radio to the effect that we in Northwestern Minnesota are still very much alive, kicking and still fighting to supply our friends with an enjoyable and relaxing vacation.

The fish are even fighting mad outside the BWCA. So come on up, bring your boat and motor, regardless of size, and let us show you that we've got room enough for everybody. The trees are still very green the the lakes are still very blue and the water drinkable, even in spite of those dirty old outboard motors."

Crappie Tournament

The 13th annual crappie fishing tournament will be held on Lake Minnetonka April 19. Year after year this event has attracted fishermen from all over Minnesota and neighboring states. More than 15,000 fishermen took part in the event a couple of years ago.

The tournament begins early in the morning April 19, with the official weigh-in taking place at 2 p.m. at Lord Fletcher's in Spring Park.

Fishermen must register at any of the Holiday Station stores or the Holiday Village stores in the Twin City area. Registration must take place before April 19.

DNR Nursery Production Hits 13 Million Mark

Three nurseries operated by the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources produced 13 million trees for planting on public and private lands this spring.

DNR forester William Berndt said the nurseries will produce 18 million trees next year — and even more during the following years — as part of an accelerated forest management program to meet the anticipated future wood product needs of the state.

The trees are sold for approximately the cost of producing them.

This year, said Berndt, nearly 5.6 million trees will be planted by private land owners in addition to over 300,000 that have been purchased by forest industries.

County owned lands, federal lands and school forests will take 2.5 million trees and 4.6 million will be planted on state owned lands.

In addition to planting for timber production, the seedlings are used in windbreaks and shelterbelts, for wildlife habitat, to control soil erosion, and in Christmas tree plantations.

The trees may only be planted for conservation purposes and are not intended for ornamental use.

Need Permit For Work On Lakes, Streams

Minnesota Department of Natural Resources has reminded contractors and shoreland owners that permits are required before changing the course, current or cross section of a public body of water.

Officials noted that the spring construction season will be starting soon and many new shoreland owners are not aware of state laws and regulations.

Nearly every activity or project involving placement of a structure or fill in a lake or stream requires a permit from the DNR.

Types of work requiring a permit include excavation or dredging of shoreline or lake bed, water level control, impoundments, permanent docks, breakwaters, harbors and marinas, underwater sewer and water lines, stream or channel changes and partial or complete drainage.

Some other activities also require permits and officials cautioned anyone planning work in or near public waters to check with the department before proceeding.

Applications for permits should be made as early as possible so that they can be processed by the time the work is to be started.

Information can be obtained from DNR regional offices in New Ulm, Rochester, St. Paul, Grand Rapids, Brainerd and Bemidji.

The informal western-style steak fry, paid for through 1979 club dues, will begin with a social hour from 6 to 7 p.m. Dinner will be served at 7.

Trophies will be presented to 1979 league champions.

DNR Issues Reminder To Smelt Fans

With April the usual month for the smelt run along Minnesota's Lake Superior shore, the Department of Natural Resources has issued a reminder of the smelt fishing regulations.

Smelt may be taken with dip nets and minnow seines, but the seines may not be more than 25 feet in length of more than four feet in depth.

The seines may not be used in any stream except the St. Louis river nor may they be used in Lake Superior within 100 feet of the mouth of any stream except the St. Louis river.

This means that smelt fishermen in streams are confined to the use of dip nets.

Smelt may be taken without limit and may be bought or sold.

And one last thing: Smelt fishermen are required to have an angling license if they are 16 years of age or older and under the age of 65.

SKI REPORT

by Dr. Hugh Patterson

Leaving Steamboat Springs we soon started up over lofty 9,426-foot Rabbit Ears pass. This was in beautiful mountain park areas with lots of snow. We soon turned off U.S. 40 on state highway 14, north in high mountain country between 7,000 and 9,000 foot elevation. Near Walden we took Colorado 125 and 127 to Wyoming 230. This goes through high mountain country to Laramie, Wyoming. After a good rest here, we headed west and up on Wyoming 130 to Medicine Bow, our next ski area.

My interview here was with Jim Weatherill, the manager. They have had a good season, helped a good deal by their new snowmaking set up. They opened for skiing November 17 and stay open to one week past Easter. Tow fees are $7 weekdays and $8.75 weekends.

Services are complete with a good ski school, ski and rental shop and a cafeteria in a very comfortable chalet. Brown baggers are welcome. Snow dressing is excellent with three machines. Medicine Bow is a very friendly area and especially good for family skiing. If you are driving to Steamboat, think of stopping off here and at Terry Peak on the way.

Medicine Bow has a chairlift, two T-bars and a small rope tow. Its elevation at the base is 9,000 feet, the highest on our trip. The vertical elevation is about 650 feet, so the summit is not too high. We have been skiing the mountains for two weeks, and felt fine the day we were there. I skied 17,000 feet of vertical my day there.

All types of skiers will have a good time here. When skiing it from the top the easy runs are on your right, and those on the left are very challenging. I tried them all.
